Prairieland Talk . . .

From Desert to Breadbasket

By ROMAINE SAUNDERS, Retired, Former Frontier Editor

LINCOLN-The soil conservation alarmists are not, of course, the only ones who dip into the realm of fiction with respect to the pioneers. But that need not stand in the way of the young folks writing prize-winning essays. And it brings a sinile to any of the remnants of earlier prairieland life to read some things written by the moderns who assume to draw aside the curtain that covers the past.

A book was written by a Ph. D. in which among erroneous statements the author tells the reader that buffalo hunters removed the skin of the animal by slitting it down the back. But we will be charitable - maybe that was merely a typographical error and he really meant to say

"belly." The pioneers practiced "soil conservation" and employed two methods. One was to scatter a bit of hay over a field when dry hot winds blew. The most common method was to keep hands off and let nature take care of Saunders the "conservation" and within a few seasons blowouts would be drifted in and grassed over.

Romaine

In the sandhills south of O'Neill, where the McClure herds trailed in the long ago, there were deep blowouts that have long since drifted in and vegetation taken over by the simple processes of nature. This has been going on through the passing years until the country out that way, as elsewhere, is not what it once was. There was no "over-grazing" on the part of early settlers-the wide sweep of prairieland was open before them on which their beef herds grew fat and sassy.

If you went among these herds without a horse under you it was at the peril of your life. At one time in the geographical history of our western continent our great prairieland was known as the great American desert.

Today it is the nation's breadbasket because the pioneers let nature do its work of "conservation.'

What is this "farm problem" demanding so much attention? To produce a crop and get it sold has ever been the concern of the farmer. He is not the only American patriot who has "problems"-from school kids to the biggest industrialist or newspaper editor life is beset with problems and thank God it is. When your problems have all been met you are ready for your last resting place six feet below the top

Remember Pearl Harbor. Another anniversary approaches of the event that set the world on fire and brought about the employment of the first atom bomb to bring Nippon to his knees. Some of us have occasion to recall that night that settled over Honolulu because of having a son in naval service there. One keen witted woman on the island saw not only the tragedy of it but glimpsed a bit of humor as she wrote home to the folks on the mainland.

The hair pulling and name calling and snapping and snarling among the nation's great involving not so much patriotism but who will be the greatest and run things, recalls an incident in the days of the ration cards in '42. My life's compandays of the ration cards in 42. My mes compar-ion and I had gone to the schoolhouse a mile 'north of our home in Swan precinct to get the per-mits for certain supplies. When we got back to the house I sat down and wrote the following which appeared in The Frontier at the time: "Pausing a moment while Mary Ann Winkler made the final stroke with the pen before hand-ing me two of the war ration books, overtime pay made the final stroke with the pen before hand-ing me two of the war ration books, overtime pay for teachers was mentioned. Miss Winkler remained at her desk some three hours extra each evening last week. 'I do it for my country,' she said. That's simple; direct, understandable. Do it for That's simple, direct, understandable. Do it for my country! Doesn't that knock the grouch out of you? A country school at $50 a month is no snap for a young woman who stays evenings in her one-room school and with a smile makes out her one-room school and with a smile makes out her one-room school and with a smile makes out her one-room school and with a smile makes out her one-room school and with a smile makes out her one-room school and with a smile makes out her one-room school and with a smile makes out her one-room school and with a smile makes out her one-room school and with a smile makes out her one-room school and with a smile makes out her of the dust storm that visited to be drying up. . Lincoln courts assessed her a $100 fine and suspended her driver's license for six months maybe to let Omaha understand that they cannot turn their drunk women loose to endanger traffic on the streets of the capital city.

Harry Truman, snow white hair and wrinkled prow, but still able to bray with the best of the Missouri mules, took to the air and the TV to give his version of the controversial Harry Dexter White affair, or so much of it as he found convenient to recall. Mr. Truman makes the effort to defend his own part in retaining a known spy in an important federal post. Can't condemn him for that though his record as president has been publicly repudiated. This whole White affair is more or less disgraceful. And Truman has not broken an alabaster box of ointment for its burial. It was the characteristic speech such as the country had become familiar with and tired of with such outbursts as "phony," "lies" and "mealymouth," with which Truman as a politician was well stocked. The public is interested in what the facts are in these important congressional investigations, not the partisan hogwash.

At the November election, 1903, Billy Hagensick, the "village blacksmith," was the choice of one voter in Grattan precinct for sheriff, though Billy's name was not on the printed ballot. And a patriot up at Atkinson that election was not satisfied with either the republican, fusion or prohibition candidates for clerk of the district court, so he wrote in Neil Brennan's name and let it go at that. The republicans elected their candidate for sheriff, Charley Hall, and Gilmour, for clerk, pulled through with a majority of 23 votes and the republicans got control of the county board. Fusionists got the rest. . . In the last issue in October that year the Spencer Advocate gave space to this item: "Misses Kate and Mattie Mann and Owen Meredith of O'Neill came over Sunday and Metal Work Topic stopped overnight in our tiptop town."

AL OF THERE IS AND

Today is Thanksgiving day-or so it is called. Its observance was originated as a very special day on which all of us should take time off to give thanks for the great wealth of life we enjoy. In this great land wealth abounds and one need spend only a few moments to enumerate -and evaluate-all the many blessings that are ours. Certainly we should all be very humble and grateful for the American heritage-the greatest worldly gift of all.

We Americans are among the privileged who enjoy freedom of religion-a privilege taken for granted but certainly not enjoyed by all peoples of the world.

But for most of us, alas, it will not be Thanksgiving day. It will be turkey day-the day of the great annual eating contest after the long sleep of that morning.

Like armistice day, Christmas and memorial day, it will be greeted only because it's a holiday from work. This is a sad commentary yet indeed it is all too true.

We Americans, who have the most to be thankful for of any people in the world, willmost of us - forget to give thanks this day. Oh, we say, it's silly to set aside a special day for such a thing, because we all know that deep down inside we're thankful. By that same token, mother's day is ridiculous, too, also statues to great peoples' memory, church edifices while we could just as effectively pray by ourselves while out hunting.

Yes, today we are observing "Thanksgiving" again:

A few of the more appreciative and stalwart will arise and go to church, and there'll be a lot of pew space left over.

Far, far fewer will breathe a silent prayer of thanksgiving by themselves, a thing they always claim a person can do just as effectively in a car as in a church.

Some homes will have grace before meals as a regular daily thanksgiving practice; a few others will have it just this once because it is Thanksgiving day.

Reed O'Hanlon, jr., editor of the Blair Pilot-Tribune, states it this way:

"Why not grace before the feast, just this once, if on no other occasion? Lots of decent and fairly intelligent people do it all the time these days. It takes just a moment-and the potatoes and gravy will still be hot when you're done. It will at least emphasize the spirit of the occasion, and it will elevate your table to something more dignified than a trough."

Ex-Nebraskan Herbert Brownell kicked up quite a fuss when he rattled the bones of Harry Dexter White. It's sad, strange and ironic that White should have been permitted to operate in espionage - and even enjoy protection - while holding key posts in the U.S. government.
