McGinn Looking Ahead To '62 Golden Glove Tilt

LINCOLD, BESK.

It takes a pretty good man to battle his way through elimination bouts and to finally end up in the main event—the Chicago

Golden Gloves. It takes an even bigger man to win the hearts of sports columnists, his sparring partners, his opponents and the ring officials to walk off with a bigger prize—the Sportsmanship trophy given to the most popular lightweight contender at the Chicago fights.

All of this was done by Jack McGinn, O'Neill's boxing star. Jack left for Chicago February 25, after two days of training in Omaha, with a party of eight fighters. Accompanying them were Omaha World-Herald sports columnist, Wally Provost and wife, Coach Jack Fickler and Trainer Bob McKee. The group signed in at the La Salle hotel and from this point on, Jack began one of the most enjoyable trips a young athlete could have. His first day of fighting which was Monday started with weighing in at noon at the Catholic Youth Organization gym and with x-rays. At 5 p.m. the fighters drew names for their opponents in the first fight and following this Jack had a thorough physical check-up

His fight started at 7:30 p.m. and as all his friends already know, he successfully wound through this one and also his next one that same evening to give him a berth in the quarterfinals Wednesday night. In answer to questions concerning the crowd, lights and size of the Chicago stadium (the largest indoor arena in the world), Mc-Ginn said he felt no nervousness in regard to anything but his opponents. The only difference the fighting there and in Nebraska was the size of his gloves. He wore 10 ounce gloves there and in Omaha, he fought with 8 ounce

His Wednesday night fight, which he lost by a decision at the end of three rounds was a disanpointment but not a heartbreaker. His opponent had him out-pointed in experience and according to Jack: "I did the best I could but he had me and I knew it. I didn't get hurt but I was a little wobbly once in the second round and I knew then that I would have to take him with a knockout in the third round if I were going to win. I just couldn't do it, so it was no surprise to me when they gave the decision to my opponent. However, it wasn't all fighting and training. Jack enjoyed many sightseeing trips and his most exciting excursion was going through a German submarine at the Science and Industry Museum. He was also greatly impressed with the size of Stadium where they had 90

Golden Gloves. He has in his possession many treasures to help him remember this experience: a beautiful corduroy robe with his name on back and the emblem of the O'-Neill American Legion which first sponsored him; a jacket and topaz ring which he won at the Omaha fights, and the top trophy of all-the Sportsmanship award, which he didn't even know he had won until he read it in the paper after his return home. Now, it's back to the quiet way of life for Jack but it won't be many months before he'll be working out again with Max and Dean Pofahl of Ewing, preparing for a return ticket to the 1962 Golden Gloves.

O'Neill's city council Tuesday night rejected an application for an on-sale liquor permit and approved an ordinance limiting the number of beer and liquor permits in the city. Turned down was Max Golden's application for a liquor license for the Golden hotel. In setting a limit on the number of licenses to be granted in the city, the council geared the limit with the number of residents in the city. Liquor by the drink licenses were limited to one per 1,600 of population. Package liquor permits will be granted at the rate of one per 3,000 persons while on-sale beer permits may be sold at the rate of two per 1,000 people.

These restrictions would hold such permits to the number now in force in O'Neill.

In the same ordinance fees for these permits were increased. Liquor-by-the-drink licenses were raised from $500 to $750 per year; package sale permits from $300 to $450 per year and beer permits from $150 to $225 a year. The new fees will be effective when licenses come up for renewal in May. While the ordinance was approved at Tuesday night's meeting, it will not become effective for about 30 days. In other action the council granted a building permit to Joyce Clinkscales for a 60x40-ft. addition to the Town House, approved payments of $1,000 each to the O'Neill Band Boosters and Chamber of Commerce and appointed an annexation committee to study any area discussed for amexation to the city. Also approved was payment to Chief of Police Chris McGinn and Officer Milford Coats for extra time they have worked on the police force. The extra time is incurred because there is no third officer on the force now.

Councilmen are seeking applicants for the part time relief job in the police department.
