Meet Your Correspondent

This article is the first of many written to acquaint the readers with Frontier correspondents — the persons who cover the news in every spot in this area. In the past years Verdigre has received considerable publicity in territorial newspapers, and a great deal of this publicity has been through the efforts of Vac Randa, Frontier correspondent.

Vac Randa

Vac was born near Niobrara and moved to Verdigre in 1900. He had a contract at that time to build the Verdigre rural telephone line, the first lines in that part of Knox county. Vac believes his line into O'Neill was the first one entering this city. It was a difficult project building telephone lines then as all of Vac's transportation was by foot. He had to walk the entire 400 miles of line, several times, climbing each pole until the job was completed. Vac since then has served in many civic positions, including six and one-half years on the draft board, many years on the city council, the board of education and the volunteer fire department. He inscribed graduation diplomas for over a quarter of a century. While on the fire department Vac well remembers the time Verdigre had the largest, most destructive fire in its history—when the Verdigre roller mills burned to the ground. The Verdigre correspondent has a great interest in anything that will better his community. When any event occurs which will promote his town, Vac proudly writes of the happening and sees that his items are placed in The Frontier. His loyalty doesn't stop at
