Hurricane Snow, Winds Hit

of-ways reported seeing many dead critters along the way. Until presstime early Thursday it was impossible to estimate the cattle losses. But there were observers freely predicting that losses overnight might be even greater than during all last winter.

When the mercury began to drop Tuesday night the stockmen—large operators and small—were fearful the casualties among cattle would be staggering.

'Winter At Its Worst'

Because of the rapid thawing on Sunday and Monday, many streams were swollen and lakes and ponds were to be found in the lowlands and meadows. Stockmen knew that some of the straggling cattle would wander into those places as well as rivers and other streams.

The siege was aptly described by Chuck Apgar, "Voice of The Frontier" radio announcer, as "winter at its worst."

Early Wednesday the gigantic job of digging out was begun. State highway department crews, unsung heroes of a year ago, tackled the task at the break of dawn. One crew, Charles Porter and Vernon Eppenbach, discovered the frozen body of Robert L. Gesirich, 23, of Atkinson. Gesirich's body was lying along the side of the road near the Gibson place, a mile east of the city limits on highways 20 and 275. They turned around and advised authorities.

A rotary snowplow promptly went to the John Dick place, 4 miles northwest of the city, where it wallowed into a drift a half-mile long and 8 feet deep. A year ago the drift was not so long but higher. Another plow, coming in from the west, waded in from the other end. By 8 o'clock Wednesday evening the plows met midway and traffic began moving through the cut.

By 4:30 p.m. Wednesday traffic was flowing between Grand Island and O'Neill. Plows working south from here and north from Bartlett did not experience too much difficulty. Points south of here received not as much snow as did O'Neill. By Wednesday afternoon highway 275 was opened from O'Neill to Omaha. Plowing in that direction was made easier because of less snow to the southeast. A plow working north from O'Neill on highway 281 broke down Wednesday afternoon on the Eagle creek hill. The rotary, after it had completed its task at the Dick snowbank, picked up where the wedge-type plow left off. By early today (Thursday) the road was open to the South Dakota line and beyond.

The O'Neill to Sioux City link on highway 20 was the last major stretch of highway to be opened.

Curious thing about Tuesday's storm was the distribution of snow. In many level meadows and fields and on some stretches of highways the surface was blown free of snow. But where normally small drifts develop after a winter storm there sprang behemoths.

Wednesday morning's calm was almost as surprising to weather-hardened Holt countyans as the storm. The morning after dawned clear and bright. But the mercury lingered below the 10-degree mark until midday.

Holt residents accepted the uncovering act with gusto. A year ago the digging out was an everlasting process. But by nightfall Wednesday it could be said that wheels, though creaky and crunchy, were being unlimbered and turning.

On O'Neill's main thoroughfare the uncovering yielded dozens of automobiles. Old Dobbin' came into service and was dismayed at what had come to pass.

In a broadcast during the height of the storm Apgar stated that a large yellow truck was parked outside the studio window in The Frontier building, probably 20 feet away from the announcer: "The storm is so intense that sometimes gusts of wind completely obliterate the big truck." Anyone attempting to face the north wind was immediately blinded.

A tall tale comes via radio out of the white sands of New Mexico. Out there where scientists are toying with the idea of conquering other worlds, hoping somehow to wing their flight toward the starry firmament. When science speaks may be we should stop, look and listen. Focusing their scientific gaze upon the scene of grandeur back to earth with a lucid tale in the heavens they have come of having discovered out beyond the earth's atmosphere a moving object traversing space at a rate of speed not yet attained by man. From the form and shape dimensions and movement of the object the learned conclusion was reached that a delegation from an outlying planet had ventured this way to look us over. If so, they saw a plenty, and that plenty was enough to cause them to hasten to cover in their own celestial retreat.

the others. These candidates for citizenship first had a course of instruction furnished by the Lincoln high schools in English, American history, federal government, Nebraska state organization, and government of the city of Lincoln. No doubt after 2 years of drilling in these subjects they are better informed with the rest of us under the ample folds of Old Glory. They came from 14 distant lands, the nearest being Canada, the ancestral home of 3 of the group. Russia, Germany, France, Italy, England, Scotland, the Scandinavian countries and other European sections account for on the duties and privileges of citizens than many natives.

Are you fearful the young America is going to the bow-wows? I guess there are all kinds out of which recently shown a notable example of youthful sincerity, religious fervor and recognition of eternal verities. A group of some 1,500 students of a college in an Illinois town, with the faculty, are reported to have spent 39 hours in devotions, confessions and shouts of victory.

This attracted countryside attention, but is not an isolated case as Nebraska capital city has institutions of learning which draw students from the ends of the earth, and what went on at the college in the Illinois town is experienced here in a week of prayer twice a year.

Similar groups of youth across the country will become the salt of the earth

On October 22, 1931, The Frontier ran a story that traveled across the Pacific ocean. The late Emil Sniggs was one of the last of the community's blacksmiths. He retired from active work with 3 tons of horse shoes in his warehouse. The Frontier made a story of the horse shoes that was taken up by the Associated Press, appearing in state papers, then Honolulu and traveled as far as the Philippines. Sniggs at that time had grown to be a decrepit old man, broken in body and financially destitute and that story was a bright spot in his otherwise gloomy existence.

On the theory that bulk robs of quality, the country now being overrun with spellbinders expounding their specialized nonsense there isn't a gifted orator in the outfit. And by the same token had John L. Lewis called a man a liar in O'Neill a generation ago he would have been knocked cold.

Times are becoming normal. Unemployment and three personal injury suits started in one day in Lincoln courts, not to mention the holdups and safe crackings.
