Safety Campaign Gets Underway

Occupational accidents in America last year caused the death of some 16,000 workers, the injury of 2,000,000 more and economic losses of $4,500,000,000, Maurice J. Tobin, secretary of labor and general chairman of the President's conference on industrial safety, has revealed. "The fact that the president of the United States has called a national conference on industrial safety," Secretary Tobin declared, "bears testimony to the gravity of this problem. It is true that there has been a 50 percent reduction in occupational accidents in the past quarter of a century and it is also true that the worker of today is safer at his job than in his home or on the street.

"However, when every 32 minutes an American citizen encounters death on his job, and when every 16 seconds another worker suffers a disabling injury, it is time for employers, employees and the general public to sit up and do something about it.

The Frontier is the ideal medium for reaching Holt county people who need to be provided with the latest information concerning industrial accidents and the modern methods of avoiding them."

Secretary Tobin pointed out that, according to statistics, more workers suffered disabling injuries between 10 and 11 a. m. and between 3 and 4 p. m. than during any hours of the day.

Tobin said, "It is in the smaller business or plant that the influence of accident prevention techniques is particularly needed. Individually, the small business concern does not have a startling number of accidents during any one year. However, considering all small business firms collectively, they report a greater number of accidents annually than the larger plants. "I do not mean to say that management in smaller plants is less considerate, but rather to point out where general education can be especially helpful. Most big plants have safety specialists and accident-prevention workers constantly on the job. The much more numerous small plants often must look to outside sources for help," secretary Tobin concluded.
