Green Valley Hit

(Continued from page 1.) From Deloit and Cella communities comes reports that bluegrass stripping is in full tilt, but the quality is not as good as usual.

Mrs. Henry Reimer, The Frontier's Deloit correspondent writes: "Grasshoppers are thick, but if we have plenty of moisture little damage will be done."

Corn that was replanted in the Deloit vicinity was slow in coming until the rain on the Fourth.

Pre-Fourth Run Light at Omaha

There was fire if not fireworks in pre-Fourth livestock trade at Omaha. Supply ran light. Slaughter cattle sold 25-50-cents higher, some yearlings up more, the over all price range $21.00 - $31.25, quotable steer top $32.50, bulk $30.50, best heifers $29.50. Cows sold strong to 50-cents up, $15.00-$22.00, heiferettes to $25.00. Bologna bulls sold to $22.75, odd head $23.00, beef to $22.00; vealers $24.00 - $29.00. Stockers and feeders sold only steady despite light supply, bulk $25.00-$27.50, best feeder steers some at $28.00. Stock cows brought $20.75, their calves at side $30.00 per hundredweight.

Hogs last week at Omaha picked up 75-cents-$1.50 and Monday another 25 - cents - $1, reflecting the fact that in meat trade only pork values have been stimulated by war news.

Prairieland Talk

The governor's richly appointed chamber at the state house receives many visitors, the swarms of those seeking freedom, others imploring for freedom of a convicted felon or the many well-wishers of the chief executive have ventured in upon its velvet-tufted floor.

Gov. Val Peterson received a group a day last week that must have caused him to drop the mantle of state and stand humbled and sympathetic in the presence of a mother and her children.

Mrs. Paul N. Hill and 3 children—age 13, 10 and 7 years—had come to receive at the hands of the governor a posthumous token in the form of a medal for acts of heroism on the part of the husband and father of that family, a Lincoln bus driver who perished in the May 8 flood that overwhelmed him on the highway.

If wounds were torn afresh by a simple token, the widowed wife and fatherless children will cherish the memory of an act that enshrines the husband and father as one of the heroes of a desolating disaster that fell in this state.

Young America has been cheated out of the years' greatest thrill by the collusion of elders. In the frightening name of safety, city ordinance has blocked out the time-honored sport of shooting firecrackers and so has gone the sports and gaiety, good fellowship and patriotic appeal of the Fourth of July celebrations.

The reading of the Declaration of Independence, the flights of oratory, the inspiration of the singing of the national hymn sung by Kitty Dwyer, Rose Fallon, Hattie Potter and Grant Smith on the bass and the tenor carried by Smith Merrill, Charley Hall officiated as marshal and Sliver (not Silver) Triggs heading the "Grand Callithumpian Parade."

Horse races, foot races, games and contests—one continual round and the night's fireworks. Printers had done their darndest to draw a crowd by creating masterpieces of chromatic posters in red and blue, and did the crowds through the old town and put in the day!

The story is told of King Cyrus having taken a certain prince captive with his wife and children, asking the prince what he would give for his freedom. The prince replied that he would give the king half of his possessions. And what will you give if I set your children free, asked the king. I will give all of my possessions, said the prince. Again the king asked, what will you give if I set your wife free? I will give my life, said the prince. All were given their liberty. The prince called his wife's attention to the striking look of King Cyrus as they were questioned. She replied she had noticed nothing striking in him. Woman, where were your eyes, said the prince. And with tears moistening that woman's eyes, she replied, they were on the man who offered his life that I might be set free.

Another consignment of graduates has been turned loose. They have been advised by commencement speakers of their opportunities and the challenge of the hour and go forth well equipped in that respect and scholastic attainments into an unfriendly world. The professions seem to be pretty well monopolized but then there is always room at the top. I know a bricklayer near 3 score and 10 years of age who earns $100 a week and sewer diggers receiving about the same. But with the dignity of a university degree to maintain you don't care to go out and acquire a pair of hard rough hands even for a fat weekly pay check.

Much is said on behalf of the people working for wages. Time the employer should receive some consideration. He has to scratch his head at times figuring how to meet the payroll and he may not have a dime left after the help is paid for his own household needs. He keeps the business going somehow which furnishes the means of livelihood for other families, though at times on the ragged edge between closing shop and keeping going. The heroes of industry are not the large corporations but the small business units owned by an individual who devotes long hours to keeping things moving and the public supplied with some essentials.

A half-century ago a New Jersey patriot, Hon. Charles N. Fowler, smoothed the troubled elements of his day when he prescribed for the turbulent statesmen that which applies equally to all:

Love, not hate.
Concord, not discord.
Reason, not passion.
Wisdom, not prejudice.
Truth, not error.
Facts, not fiction.
Experience, not experiment.
Construction, not destruction.
Law and order, not anarchy.
Honor, not dishonor.

If each word that has been said and printed about flood control and soil erosion was a shovel full of earth the job would have been done long ago.

You are not going to have much fun out of "enjoying yourself." The personal pronoun left to himself is a pretty dull hombre.

Under the guidance of evil intentions it is easy to believe the worst.

If you have to borrow to take a vacation trip better stay at home.
