Well-Groomed Hair Is a Fall Must

A fashionable fall hat suffers when Milady's hair appears lack-luster. Unsightly dandruff, however, can be prevented when warm oil is applied to the hair part with sterile cotton.

NOW that the first nip of autumn is in the early morning air, it's time to think of conditioning your hair so that it will look its best with new fall millinery.

It's of particular importance, during the fall and winter months, that both scalp and hair be their healthiest. Airless confinement under hats and scarves tends to endow hair with a lack-luster appearance.

First of all, rid yourself of dandruff. Determine whether yours is the flaky kind that results from scalp dryness, or the type that thrives at the roots of oily hair. Then take appropriate steps.

If yours is the dry kind of dandruff, treatments with oil are often helpful. To give yourself a home treatment, warm the oil slightly and rub it into your scalp with a sterile cotton ball. Work carefully along the part of your hair.

When one section of your scalp has been thoroughly saturated, repeat your hair in another place and repeat the process until your whole head has been treated.

Wrap your head in a towel and leave the oil on for several hours—preferably overnight—before washing it out.

The most effective approach in ridding yourself of oily dandruff is to tackle it at its source—excess oil. Try washing it more frequently than you ordinarily do, with a vegetable-oil soap of the type used by physicians and surgeons.

In order to keep your hair at its gleaming best, turn your attention to shampoos. Try various kinds until you discover one that seems right for your hair, and keeps it radiant and silky.

And make certain no residues of shampoo or minerals from the water are left in your hair. If the water you use for hair washing is not ideal, you might find it helpful to use a water conditioner in both your wash and rinse waters. These aid your shampoos in lathering more abundantly, and help strip dulling films from your hair.

To safeguard the silkiness of her hair against the soap film or mineral deposits found in rinse water, the alert lady (above) adds water conditioner to both shampoo and rinse water.
