'Voice' Develops An Irish Brogue

"Voice of the Frontier" listeners were slightly jarred at 9:45 a.m. Saturday, March 17, when the usual theme song, a march, was abandoned and instead they heard the nonsensical piece entitled, "Clancy Lowered the Boom."

As if the theme switch didn't inject enough Irish into the program for St. Patrick's day, George Hammond, the announcer, got off some patter that went like this:

"Good morgan, ever'one. Sure 'n 'tis George O'Hammond a speakin' 't ya from O'Neill, the capital of little Ireland, the place where of St. Patrick is a revered man indeed."

"This is our regular Saturday morning edition of the 'Voice of the Frontier' program. Sure 'n a wee bit o' Irish flavor on this good ol' St. Patrick's day 'twon't hurt no one, just a little bit."

"Sure 'n the auld sod is a sight 't behold this morgan, too. It's buried under something less than a foot of snow. Auld mother nature has beautified things mighty fine. Pretty as a picture, it is—the trees loaded with snow, a real winterlike dress."

"Auld Ireland was never like this. I'll bet the river Shannon (excuse me, I mean the Elkhorn) is practically covered with this whiteness this morning."

"Yes, 'tis the day of everlastin' glory for good ol' St. Pat—and I, fer one, am a wearin' the green."

"Maybe while we're on the subject of the Irish we should mention that today—March 17—is the 82d birthday anniversary of one of our most faithful listeners—Mrs. Nellie Beha, a bit of the auld sod herself. Though she has a German married name, she's Irish, true-and-true."

"Mrs. Beha is the mother of Bill Beha, whose voice you used to hear on this program, especially during the Recurring Blizzards of 1948-49."

"Happy birthday, Mrs. Beha, on this St. Patrick's day, 1951. . . O'Hammond's sign-off ran: 'Well, 'tis time to be a leavin' ya'."

"I'm goin' out in this snow with my green tie a sparklin'. This is George O'Hammond, signing off the O'Frontier program from O'Neill."

"Sure 'n ol' St. Patrick would be impressed with this O'Neill snow this morning—nine inches of it, my my."

"My friend, Cal O'Stewart, at the controls, says it's time to be a leavin' the air!"

The "Voice of the Frontier" program is heard each Monday, Wednesday and Saturday at 9:45 a.m. (WJAG, 780 kc) direct from O'Neill studios in The Frontier building.

Market Strong After Last Week's Storm

Our O'Neill sale a week ago proved to be a "popping good" market despite the storm conditions earlier in the week that forced cancellations of some nearby sales. This week the region is digging out from another weekend storm, and there are indications of another good market—provided, of course, the stockmen can get in with their livestock.

Already in the yards are about 20 good whiteface cows and calves and quite a number of small calves. These will be offered today.
