SMITH ENGINEERING INSTRUCTOR . . . T/Sgt. Derald A. Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. Mike A. Smith, of Tekamah, formerly of O'Neill, an aircraft electric specialist, is one of the flying professors presently instructing strategic air command pilots and maintenance crews at Carswell AF Base, Tex., in the latest developments on the huge B-36 bomber. Sergeant Smith, 23, serves on the teaching staff of a B-36 mobile training detachment, a movable school, which was flown from the mobile training group headquarters at Chanute air force base, Illinois, to Carswell Base to meet the increasing need for the specialized training on the air force's largest bomber. Highly qualified specialists of the B-36 detachment teach air force personnel the intricate operation and maintenance of this "flying giant," whose engines produce more horsepower than nine locomotives, to carry 84,000 pounds of bombs anywhere in the world. Prior to joining the mobile training group, Sergeant Smith attended several air force aircraft specialist schools.—Air Force Photo.
