

Korea Veteran Surprises Mom

down and pick us up, one plane at a time. When one would take-off another would land.
"This was done under enemy fire. We had to modify some of our equipment in order to chop a landing strip in the frozen ground. The strip, between two ridges of hills, was low in the middle. Going down the C-47s could pick up speed and get airborne when starting up the incline. The whole thing wasn't pleasant, believe me.
"Our air fighters kept the enemy bottled up during the daylight, but at night...
"Some of the fellows weren't air-evacuated from there and had to battle it out.
"It was cold. We didn't have thermometers but the Koreans told us it was as low as 30 degrees below zero."

Bud was wounded during the trap fighting, but he didn't discuss the incident very much. He was shot in the toes, also suffered from frost bite.

"When you have to stay out 24 hours a day in that cold and you can't dry your clothing it gets a little colder than it actually is. Lots of the fellows froze up and couldn't take it."
Young Zempel, who was born at Hamburg, N. D., had a short period of hospitalization after being wounded.

From August until April he spent about three-fourths of the time in the line-fighting.

Bud's mother, Mrs. George Fink, lives 3 miles north and 1 mile west of Page. Bud set foot on U.S. soil on April 14. He speeded for Shelby, got his car (with a broken-down generator) and set out for Page—driving night and day.

On Saturday night he walked in on his mother, his stepfather, George Fink, his kid brothers and sisters—surprising them. They hadn't heard from him since March 21.

Zempel will have a 30-day rest and then report for duty at Pocatello, Ida.

Bud has undying praise for the navy and marine corps fighter pilots who provided his outfit with air support.

"They kept the Reds' heads down during the day."

With typical marine esprit de corps, young Zempel predicted "we could have held the Frozen Chosen if we'd had another marine division."

Bud was loaded with mementoes of the Orient—including a cane, a billiard cue and a giant-sized smoking pipe.

He also brought along a few pairs of marine fatigues and Monday was astride a tractor helping his stepdad plant oats.

"Nothing could be better," he sighed.
