Built-Ins Can Solve Your Storage Space Problems

If home space were sold by the bag, most of us would rush right down and purchase a couple of dollars' worth every payday.

Unfortunately, extra floor area is not come by so easily. If high rentals or building costs are preventing your acquiring it in the usual fashion—by moving to a larger apartment or adding a spare room onto your home—then you must resort to planning to attain those precious inches.

One solution, if your husband is a handyman or your carpenter reasonable in his prices, is built-in furniture. You can utilize one wall for all the shelf and bureau space you need, leaving the rest of the room uncluttered. An additional advantage is planned storage. You can make every inch count by planning beforehand just what you wish to store in each spot.

For each room, it's usually a good idea to include drawer space, open shelves and enclosed shelves. The framework of this built-in furniture should be constructed of sturdy wood. For cabinet doors and drawer fronts, plywood is a good choice.

If you are not yet permanently settled, you may prefer having these wall pieces made up into separate, easy-to-move units. Make certain, however, that they match in height and width in order to give a feeling of unity when they're lined up together.

Built-in rows of drawers, cabinets and bookcases give this master-bedroom plenty of extra storage space and a handy counter along the windows. The same type of built-in is ideal for youngsters, too. The built-in and valance above it are made of birch plywood.

recommendations and selected goals for the future. The health leader gave a talk on personal care.
