

Delicate 'Line Arrangements' of Flowers Are Entirely Out of Place in Church

By BLANCHE SPANN PEASE

This is the time of year when a combination of fruit plate tastes extra special. Try it today and see if the family isn't enthusiastic with this cool idea.

You will need 1 sweet skinned apple, unpeeled, 1 orange, 1 ripe banana, salad greens, 2 or 3 berries.

Cut unpeeled apple lengthwise into 4 thin wedges. Peel orange, and slice crosswise. Cut 2 slices into halves. Peel and slice banana. Arrange 3 rows of fruit on a salad plate, using banana slices for outside rows.

She said the ladies aid of her church invested in jars, pew-end vases, baskets, urns or vases. This special equipment on children's day and at the weddings and receptions makes things a lot easier.

Two large heavy vases in white or cream are ideal. Inside have some device for holding flowers erect without crowding. A crushed ball of mesh wire fencing is good if packed solidly so that it will not tip. Even better is a bundle of 4- or 5-inch tall sections of 3/4-inch lead pipe, soldered together to fit vase at the base.

As for colors, most churches are dimly lighted, so avoid blues, purples and dark greens. White, yellow, red, pink and orange are colors that will carry best.

Use masses of one color large enough to fill the eye. The delicate "line arrangements" of our flower shows are entirely out of place in a church.

Keep bouquets heavy at the base. Top heavy arrangements are nerve wracking, and a church is the wrong place to have a basket of flowers upset. Baskets with handles are frowned upon because it is hard to keep the handle from seeming to "cut across" the bouquet.

Personally, I could forgive that fault because of the advantage that the handle gives in ease of moving them to and from the church.

Besides the 2 large containers, it is well to have a pair of matched low vases with good large "pin holders" in which to place short stemmed flowers that you must sometimes use. Carefully balanced, they will look well, though not showy. A bunch of greenery with only a few blossoms in each will be much better than a bare platform.

Flowers for the Church— Our 3-months' subscription for this week goes to Mabel Guild, of Oakdale.

Dear Blanche and Readers: Why do we take flowers to the church? What colors are best to use? What containers are most appropriate? What "holders" will help our bouquets stand up? What about baskets?

These 5 questions were discussed at club recently and a lady of authority on flower arrangements helped us out a good deal in her experience and knowledge in flowers for the church and elsewhere.

In speaking of a member who brings a "jumbled up" bouquet to church that is far from the "standardized flower arrangement" she said, "Remember that those flowers were brought there in good faith, as an act of worship. Do not scorn the humblest offering just because it does not happen to exemplify your idea of art, but strive to provide containers that will make the arrangement simple and uniform."
