Friend Husband Exasperates Homemaker with Mud, Quick Shirt Changes, Delays

By BLANCHE SPANN PEASE

Along about this time of year, lots of folks have chicken to eat, whether they raised the frites themselves or bought them, for they are more reasonably priced during this season. A stewed chicken is particularly economical.

If you have frying chickens and are getting tired of them just plain fried, why not serve deviled chicken?

DEVILED CHICKEN

You'll need the chicken for frying, salt and pepper, 1/2 cup of fat, melted, 2 tablespoons of flour, 1 cup hot water or soup stock, 1 1/2 teaspoons mustard, 2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce, 2 teaspoons tomato catsup, and paprika.

Cut the chicken up and season with salt and pepper and brown in melted fat. Remove from pan. Stir flour into the fat and add hot water or soup stock. Cook until mixture thickens, stirring constantly. Add next 4 ingredients to the cooked sauce. Place the chicken in sauce and cover pan and simmer until chicken is tender, about an hour.

For a stewing chicken, chicken with rice is simply delicious. You'll need a 3-pound stewing chicken, or a large one. Cut it into serving portions and cook with 1 small sliced onion, 2 cloves, mashed garlic, 2 bay leaves, and water to cover, also a half teaspoon of salt. Cook until tender. Brown 1 cup uncooked rice in 3 tablespoons butter and cook with 1 small onion, minced, 1 clove garlic, mashed, 1/2 cup cooked tomatoes, 1 tablespoon minced parsley, 1 green pepper, thinly sliced, 2 pimientos, mashed, and 2 1/2 cups hot chicken stock. Cook this rice mixture until tender. Serve with the chicken.
