Plea for Matrimony

Capt. E. J. King, who holds both the Distinguished Service medal and the Navy cross, and who at the age of forty-seven has just qualified as a flyer, was defending marriage at the Army and Navy club.

"The Freudians and the super-realists and the bolsheviks," he said, "can knock marriage all they please, but the fact remains—"

And Captain King chuckled.

"The fact remains that a bachelor only gets half as much mileage as a married man out of a pair of socks."

Out Our Way

Mature Cannon Fodder.
From Ann Arbor News.
Chancellor Lucius C. Clark of American university, Washington, would protect "flaming youth" in the next war and allow men of more than 50 years to fight the battles. The older men would make better "targets" than would 21-year-old boys, in whom the country's hope lies according to the opinion voiced by Dr. Clark in a commencement address.

In theory there is much to be said for his proposal. The idea of making cannon fodder of young folk, upon whom the future of a nation depends, is not altogether sensible, particularly when it is remembered that the older men are the ones who get their country into trouble and are responsible for the declarations of war. No human beings ought to be used for cannon fodder, of course, and it is possible that in time warfare will be a conflict of machines against machines, if indeed it is necessary that wars continue; but in general it may be said that young blood is more essential to national progress, particularly in reconstruction periods, than are the older ones.

However, it would be next to impossible to utilize the theory in a practical way. Youth is better able to stand up under the rigors of war; it can fight better; it succumbs less readily to disease and fatigue. If all the nations would agree to use only comparatively old men on the firing lines, something practical might be accomplished in the way of protection for "flaming youth" but such a suggestion would be only ridiculed if seriously made to any of the leading powers. And a nation defended by men over 50 years old against an invasion by men of 21 would fare rather badly. So long as there are wars youth will have to fight the battles.

Cannot Repudiate.

Chicago Journal of Commerce.
One of the serious mistakes in the republican national platform is the complete failure to mention the world court. This means that the republican party, as a party, formally changes its mind about a question on which it gave a definite pledge four years ago.

No doubt there are weighty political arguments in favor of this change of front. The entire platform, for that matter, makes a strong political appeal. Every item in it was well thought out. As far as the world court is concerned, the framers of the platform were aware that the proposal for American adherence to the court is unpopular in the Middle West. In states like Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, the anti-court sentiment is unmistakable.

But the needs of the nation, the needs of peace, require that the United States adopt practicable means for adjusting the differences that have arisen concerning the basis on which the United States shall adhere to the court. The Senate, in adopting the world court resolution, made certain reservations. The members of the court have answered with certain reservations of their own. The difficulties of adjustment are not irremovable. Far from it. But they cannot be removed without effort. That effort must be made by the executive arm of our government.

It is impossible for the nations now in the court to enter negotiations with the 90-odd members of the United States Senate. It is impossible for these nations to send emissaries to the Senate for the purpose of reaching a practicable agreement. But it is entirely possible for the president of the United States and his secretary of state to enter a series of discussions with the leading nations now in the court and with the members of the Senate committee on foreign relations, for the purpose of obtaining American adherence to the court on a basis that will protect America's interests.

Vare-Mellon Incident Causing Talk in Pennsylvania Politics

From the New York Times.

It was inevitable that the pure minds of republicans in Philadelphia would be stirred over the apparent slight to Secretary Mellon by Mr. Vare at Kansas City. Here, for example, is the June Bulletin of the Republican League of Philadelphia, which mournfully declares that what Mr. Vare did, with "the humiliation of our distinguished secretary of the treasury which it caused, is likely to reverberate through out the entire presidential campaign." Be it understood that the Republican League has succeeded to the citizens' party, which polled 134,000 votes in the Philadelphia mayoralty election last November. It was and is in opposition to the regular organization controlled by Mr. Vare, of whom it now speaks as having done "a disservice to the republican party that will loom as of major importance during the campaign." Mr. Vare has stood for party discipline and official subordination, yet he was a flagrant offender against both. The League Bulletin solemnly declares that "Secretary Mellon was chairman of the Pennsylvania delegation, and for a member of it, over the head of the chairman, to presume to commit the Pennsylvania delegation to any candidate was effrontery pure and simple, contrary to all the rules of party discipline."

At this attack Mr. Vare will probably smile. But the fact that there is resentment among Pennsylvania republicans at the way in which Mr. Vare snatched the "key" of the national convention out of the hands of Secretary Mellon is plainly indicated by the attempts to glaze over the incident. Thus the correspondent of the Philadelphia Public Ledger telegraphed from Kansas City a touching account of the series of mischances which alone prevented Mr. Vare from consulting Secretary Mellon before issuing his statement. The tragedy, it seems, turned partly on an undelivered dispatch. "If a telegram sent from the Vare train had reached the Mellon train and contact had been possible at Columbus, much of the misunderstanding created by William S. Vare's declaration for Hoover would have been avoided."

Bad luck pursued the two Pennsylvania leaders all the way to Kansas City. By some malign fate the first section of the special train became the second section at Pittsburgh, and there Secretary Mellon's car was by mistake hitched to the first section. Then, obviously, "contact between Mellon and Vare was impossible." Yet Mr. Vare did his utmost to let Mr. Mellon know what was going to happen. He sent a telegram. He made use of an "emissary." But all was in vain. Mr. Vare found it impossible to "get into touch with Mellon" immediately after arriving in Kansas City, so there was nothing for him to do but to give out, in the form of a statement, the political bomb which suddenly blew Secretary Mellon into the Hoover camp. Yet everything was done, or attempted, with the utmost regard for the sensibilities of Mr. Mellon. Mr. Vare and his friends hope that the secretary fully understands this. They disregarded and discredited and apparently ended his leadership, but they did it with the utmost regret and with the kindest feelings for him personally.

England's Estate Laws.

From New Orleans Times Picayune.

Lord Astor had a sad disillusionment when he hoped to stampee England out of one of her long established habits. Great Britain is about the only land left to civilization in which a decedent may totally disinherit his wife and children. There are constantly occurring incidents there of men leaving only a pittance to the mother of their babies and bequeathing a fortune to the "other women" or to those entirely outside the family. Laws deriving from the Code Justinian, as we have reason to know in Louisiana, take a different view of right and wrong in such cases, and the wife's part and the child's part are secure.

It appears that, whereas England has stood firmly for the personal freedom of action of the testator,

Q. Do elephants of both sexes have tusks? Which have the larger ears—African or Indian elephants?
B. McF.

A. The African elephant has very large ears, a convex forehead, and tusks in both sexes. The Asiatic or Indian elephant has small or moderate-sized ears, a concave forehead, and tusks only on the male.

all other branches of the empire have leaned toward the Justinian view. So Lord Astor, strong in his faith that right and justice were on his side, on May 16 made a motion in the house of lords that, if adopted by parliament, would have cancelled the power of the Briton to disinherit. His argument was strong and the appeal direct to the emotions.

But no! The motion was received with a grimace peculiarly British, and after realizing the hopelessness of his case, his lordship begged leave to withdraw his motion so that the common law in relation to inheritances will persist. Some of his more sympathetic friends expressed regret that Lord Astor should have given in so quickly and voiced the belief that there would have been a fighting chance. But the mover of the measure had seen the light and doubtless knew when he was beaten.

Q. How many leaves has the poison ivy?
N. M. S.

A. The poison ivy or poison oak (Rhus toxicodendron), somewhat resembles the Virginia creeper and is sometimes mistaken for it. The Virginia creeper, however, has five leaflets while the poison ivy has only three.

Chinese and Indians

Alive to Food Values

Any custom that has held its own for generations usually has something back of it, no matter how little it appears to be supported by modern science. In the opinion of Hugh S. Cumming, surgeon general of the United States Public Health service.

"For a thousand years," he says, "the Chinese have prescribed the heads of powdered toad fish as a remedy for heart trouble, and now adrenalin, the most up-to-date drug for the treatment of heart disease, has been found to exist in the head glands of that fish."

"For generations the fact that American Indian hunters always chose the liver and the white men the meat when the animals they had trapped or killed were divided was quoted as proof of their ignorance and primitive development."

"Yet in the last five years the great nutritive value of liver has come to be recognized and it is prescribed in cases of anemia."

Obedient to Command

"Order in the Court"

Patrons of a Los Angeles theater, seated behind a young woman who mislaid her purse one evening recently, missed a part of the photography, because the woman stood up to conduct her search for the lost article, but then enjoyed a little unintentional comedy which others missed.

It was during a court scene put on by the Vitaphone, and the court was hearing parties in a separate support action. Those seated behind the young woman were getting fidgety, when the judge rapped his gavel, and ordered, "Order in the court, sit down!"

The woman was so surprised that she sank back into her seat, and there she discovered the missing purse, where it had fallen.

Sea Birds Attract

The value of bird protection as a money-earning enterprise has again been shown at Perce, Quebec. Perce rock and Bonaventure island, where sea birds nest in thousands, have long been bird sanctuaries under provincial and Dominion law.

Last winter an addition of 27 rooms was made to a local hotel to accommodate the growing number of nature lovers who come each summer to this mecca of the sea fowl, and an increase was also made in the number of houses where tourists can be accommodated.

Youthful Composer

Erwin Dressel, age eighteen, is probably the youngest contemporaneous composer to have an opera accepted for production by a large opera house. His opera, entitled "Poor Columbus," will soon be brought out by the Prussian state opera at Cassel. Dressel is orchestra conductor at the municipal theater of Hanover. He first attracted nation-wide attention when, at the age of only fourteen, he composed the incidental music to Shakespeare's "As You Like It" for the state theater at Berlin.

Costa Rican Education

The minister of public instruction of Costa Rica says that Costa Rica has no standing army, but has more teachers than policemen, and more educational employees than in any other branch of the government. Education is compulsory between the ages of seven and fourteen, with at least two years of English after the fifth grade. Five years of study is required for bachelor degrees, and there are universities for those desiring higher education.

Shingled Cats Oust Tabby

Shingled cats from Siam replaced the old-fashioned fiddle-riding tabby at the recent fashionable cat show in London. Few of the domestic animals were to be found, and the tiny foreign creature with coat of black and gold was the most popular. One of these, Dion of Allington, was declared champion of all champions, and his owner said she would not take $5,000 for him.
