Speedy service is only one of the many advantages of motor transport — only one of the reasons why trucks move three out of every four tons in industry, agriculture and commerce in America . . . Other important advantages: Motor transport is flexible, covers out-of-the-way places with the same dispatch it serves cities and towns; it provides an easier ride, thus is kinder to cargoes; it's constant, continuous performance makes it possible to maintain a smooth, even flow of goods and thus eliminate the need for maintaining large inventories . . . The steady, substantial growth of the motor transport industry is a measure of the vital importance of trucks to all America.
