During the recent few years, more emphasis has been placed on dairy cattle at the Holt county fair. Warren Hansen, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Hansen of Inman has a right to be proud. He shows the best of class and the best of breed, a 20 month old Holstein.

eral men set their specifications, they either didn't have counties like Holt in mind or they didn't care, or both.

Most Holt county supervisors are convinced that it would cost the county more money by letting federal government pay half than it would now. And they have good reason to believe it the way the federal government has set it up.

So what is the answer? More roads, of course, would solve one problem but put another problem in our pocket books. In one of the future articles in this series, a list of methods whereby we can better our state and county maintained roads will appear. In the immediate future, the articles continue to deal with the problems. Next week we will take a look at State maintained roads.

A Large Task For Supervisors: 3,000 Road Miles

that many would expect the unimproved township roads to be taken care of immediately." And another pointed out if they were to take these roads, the much smaller township taxes would multiply if they were to give the township roads the same care as the county roads. In other words, you take your choice—either the tax dollar would be spread thinner and more roads would be maintained in poorer fashion or as it is now, less roads in the county would be maintained but kept in better condition. Short of that an increase in taxes—and a substantial increase—would be necessary.

The county could relieve itself altogether of the responsibility of caring for the mail routes where they fall on township roads but will work in harmony with the township boards to help maintain them when they are main lines of traffic. Under the Schroeder Mail Route Law, if an extra mill would have been levied, (and it was turned down) the county board would have helped maintain all the mail routes whether they fell on township or county roads. Even though this increase in taxes is not felt by us, the supervisors have taken it on themselves to help care for some mail routes jointly with the township where they feel their district can be bettered.

Because of the inflexibility of the federal matching fund system, Holt county is not able to afford the plan. Here's the rub: If we did avail ourselves of matching funds for county roads real trouble would begin according to most county officials. First of all, we would begin by hiring an engineer—another addition to taxes. Then we would be forced to build the county road according to rigid specifications set by the federal government which would hike the price to proportions not in accord with the budget.

In short, this is a problem which hurts Holt county more than most other counties because we have so many more miles of roads than the average county. When the federated men set their specifications, they either didn't have counties like Holt in mind or they didn't care, or both.

Most Holt county supervisors are convinced that it would cost the county more money by letting federal government pay half than it would now. And they have good reason to believe it the way the federal government has set it up.
