Had Train 93's thrust into the giant snowbank carried another one hundred yards the two-day involuntary tie up might have been averted and the life of a snowcat, Dorrance P. Gibson, been saved. Depth and length of the cut is shown here. Much of the snow that had been moved was done by two tractor-dozers, one of which overturned and killed Gibson, father of two children.—The Frontier photo and engraving

The Burlington's beleaguered westbound freight train 93 was marooned in a 1,400-ft. long snowbank more than two days. This aerial picture was taken Wednesday noon — shortly before two additional diesel engines and another snowplow came to the rescue. The O'Neill-bound freight had left South Sioux City early Monday.—The Frontier Photo with Walter Kopejtko of the O'Neill Flying Service at the controls of the camera ship.
