Homemakers in Pennsylvania
Cotton fabrics can be bought in many beautiful patterns and of the drip dry type and the texture which sheds wrinkles easily.

When buying clothing for small children endeavor to get the self-help clothes. Gerda Peterson, extension clothing specialist at the University of Nebraska, highly recommends the type that have the same kind of fasteners. Fasteners which are easy for a child to manage are grippers, zippers and large buttons. Having these fasteners in nearly the same place or in front will greatly aid a young child to help himself.

This short paragraph was found in a 1905 issue of a 20th Century Farmer magazine. "Milk wagon horses are so accustomed to seeing women with their hair up in curl papers that they refuse to stare at anything."

With the Lenten season here our menus will have to make a slight change and more dishes of egg, tuna, salmon and mackerel will be needed to fill in for the regular meat meals. Here is a sandwich filling that would be suitable for an after school snack. What child doesn't enjoy a sandwich after a busy day at school.

With the spring and the Easter season gradually approaching the thought of new clothes enters the mind of many youngsters, teenagers and their mothers.

Recently Opal Roberson, extension clothing and textiles specialist at Iowa State University, stated that a survey of over 2,000 homemakers in Pennsylvania showed that cotton fabric was the most popular.
