A Poem

From Mrs. Eby . . .

THREE PICTURES OF MY MOTHER

I chanced to see a picture of a fair and dark eyed maid; Youth's determined strength was showing from a calm face unafraid. The keen edged tool of suffering her count'nance had not marred; Lone adventures hand was beckoning to a life untried, unscarred. I saw another picture, she's my mother now you know; And the spark of youth had softened to a warm and steady glow. Through the valley of the shadow for her children life has come; Now her love and life's demanded to establish them a home. Again I saw a picture taken just the other day; More than twenty years have vanished mothers forehead edged in gray. Times pen has written boldly of tiresome days and anxious nights; Mother knew to rear her children true to God and strong for right. Do you wonder now, which picture is most beautiful to me? It is not the first I looked at, nor the second that I see. But I find the greatest beauty in the last spoken of; For it portrays the sweetness of the sacrifice of love.
