Capitol News - Board of Control Still Hot Spot At State House

By Melvin Paul Statehouse Correspondent

The Nebraska Press Association LINCOLN—A ruckus in the area of government supervised by the Board of Control is not new. Nor is it unexpected. The board supervises 19 state institutions, and the public welfare program in Nebraska. On July 1 the State School for the Deaf at Omaha and the State School for the Blind at Nebraska City go under jurisdiction of the State Board of Education.

This will leave the Board of Control, consisting of three members appointed by the governor for six-year terms, with 17 institutions. Under board supervision are some 3,500 employees and more than 8,500 inmates or patients in the institutions.

This big area of government by its size alone is spawning ground for trouble. The board has had plenty in the past 10 years especially. There are those who feel the result of the board system for managing state institutions. Others insist a system is no better than those who comprise it.

There have been battles in past sessions of the Legislature to abolish the board. Arguments have been it is difficult to fix responsibility and the board deals in too many details instead of sticking with policy decisions.

Proponents of the board system contend that to abolish it, and substitute appointed people to head up the various areas of government services now under the board, is too expensive for Nebraska. They add there would be trouble in coordinating the many activities in the various areas.

Speculation over the future of the board came up when two members fired an institution superintendent and interviewed a replacement without consulting with the chairman. The action was taken by Harold Peterson, vice-chairman and Mrs. Ethel Kirwin, board member. They said they did so because they felt that Chairman Charles Leeman would "leak" the news to statehouse reporters before the official decision. Leeman denied he had done this in the past.

After the public rift, the board members made a show of trying to heal the administrative gap among them. Observers said administrative harmony could well come about but abolishing trouble in such a large area of government would not.

Some of the lighter in his annual summation on value included stands of bees in Nebraska are worth $144,303 for tax purposes, dogs are valued at $603, 598 and airplanes at $721,624.

Driver Education

Driver education is becoming more popular in Nebraska. Dr. F. B. Decker, state education commissioner, says there were 1,500 more Nebraska high school students last year taking driving courses than for the previous year.

The total for the just completed school year was 7,506 students who got both classroom instruction and behind-the-wheel experience, Decker said.

There are also more schools offering the courses than before, he added. The total was 147 compared with 138. There were 420 public high schools operating in the state the last school year. Decker said he expects 18 more schools to offer driving training in the next school term.

Life and Speed

Nebraska motorists have been asked to take a personal part in a nationwide "slow down and live" program. Col. C. J. Sanders, chief of the state safety patrol, made the appeal, pointing to Nebraska's traffic death toll which shows fatalities down for the fifth straight month.

May deaths on Nebraska highways totaled 30, Sanders reported, as against 36 for the same month last year.

During May, the patrol chief said, safety patrolmen contacted 25,051 drivers and made 4,581 arrests plus issuing 5,477 warning cards not involving arrest.

Reformatory Work

A plan is being formulated to find more for inmates of the Men's Reformatory in Lincoln. That's the report from the Board of Control which governs the institution. Board members said the exact type of work has not been determined. Now, farming, manufacture of license plates, dairying and sign painting occupy time of some inmates. But the board said these jobs do not nearly cover all the inmates.

A soap and soap products plant will be established at the State Penitentiary to help keep inmates busy there as well as save about 20 percent on the cost of the products for state institutions.

PLAY SAFE at WORK or PLAY AWAY FROM POWER LINES!!

The overhead wires that carry dependable, low-cost electricity are perfectly safe if treated with respect. Carelessness, however, when handling tools or equipment near power lines can result in tragedy. The most common problems result from the movement of irrigation pipes, hay derricks, TV antennas, well drilling rigs and cranes. Electricity, enough to kill, will flow through any metal or other conducting material that touches high-voltage lines. Sometimes it will even flow through wood. So look up... and stay alive. KITE STRINGS can be conductors of electricity, too. Make certain Junior chooses the wide open spaces, away from power lines, when he flies his kite. It's really more fun out in the open, anyway.
