A Poem From Mrs. Eby

—Patriotism— Sometimes as I sit in a thoughtful mood and view the spot where the old elm stood, At the side of the road, near the end of the lane, my thoughts run back in childish strain; And I see myself and grieved joys, at play with neighborhood barefoot boys; But all things seem to have changed with the years, save the ties that bind the "Old Pioneers". The cabin looms up in the distance yet, where father and mother and children met, Surrounding the fire on the old earthen hearth, the happiest spot on all the earth, Where, after the evening prayer with "said" and the children tucked into the trundle bed, God's blessing came down in those olden years, and brought sweet sleep to the "Old Pioneers". I see the mother as she sits at her loom and the father as he shapes the hickory broom, Thus the work went on of a winter night, the cabin lit up by the log fire light, Or the fallow dip or a great pine knot for the hearts were light in the toiler's cot. And they needed no dazzling chandelier in the humble home of the "Old Pioneer". We may talk of improvements which time has made, through great inventions, through science and trade, The wonderful changes we've witnessed since then, of conquests by sword and production of pen; But it comes to me as a crowning thought, that the greatest of all great works ever wrought, Since the days of Adam, through all the years, to the characters built by our "Old Pioneers".
