

"THE GOBLINS'LL GET YOU"

BY SUSAN LOWE

It's a fun Halloween party for young and old when you serve these spooky favors of edible hobgoblins and a witch for good measure. These fun-favors are made with doughnuts, covered with the black magic of melted semi-sweet chocolate morsels, and faced with candy, nuts and coconut.

A crooked neck squash makes a fearsome dragon to hold appetizers on picks. Here the dragon doesn't breathe fire, but flames from canned heat concealed in the "body" make Frank toasting possible.

We like the jack-o-lantern cookies, too. Crisp refrigerator cookies (ginger, nut, or vanilla) are covered with orange frosting. With melted sweet chocolate and a toothpick, a budding portrait painter makes sport of fortune telling prophesies.

Dragons, hobgoblins and spooks are in order come the last days of October for this is the season when witches, goblins and other small sprites hie themselves forth in weird processions around the neighborhood gathering harvests of treats.

You'll want treats a-plenty on hand for the "trick and treat" crowd, for along with their sacks full of loot they're sure to bring home appetites sharpened by the outing in the autumn air.

But bear in mind that Halloween fun isn't limited to small ghosts and goblins for Halloween is the eve of All Saints Day and an evening of festivity for folks of all ages the world over. Down in New Orleans where they specialize in celebrations, the occasion takes on almost a carnival atmosphere. With a bit of ingenuity we can have much the same fun wherever we live.

Plan some high-jinks and some "fearful refreshments" and you're all set for having yourself a time with dragons, goblins, witches and spooks on Halloween.
