Announce New Credit Plan At McDonalds

Joe Stutz, manager of the local J. M. McDonald store recently returned from a company meeting in Hastings and announced that a new streamlined credit plan will go into effect in his store in mid October. According to Mr. Stutz this new credit plan will be called McDonald's Continuous Credit Option Plan. It gives each customer the option of paying up their account in full every 30 days with no service charge or of extending payments over a longer period with a small service charge. He explained that McDonald's has always been a cash store and that credit was only considered after much planning by the company to arrive at a plan that would be completely flexible and that would fit the budget planning of the majority of families. The new plan fills that need and will be handled by modern methods of monthly billing, along with plastic charge plates for each credit customer. Mr. Stutz cordially invites the public to visit with him on the store's associates concerning this new plan. He further states that the company policy of low, everyday prices will still apply, with no charge to the customer for 30 day credit and only the small monthly service charges for extended credit.
