CASE STUDY 22: Lincoln Contractor Likes His New All-Electric Home George Cook Family Finds Electric Heat Offers The 'Extra' In Living

"It pays to build well," says George Cook, Lincoln general contractor. And the Cooks also live by that formula . . . when they built their new ranch home north of Lincoln, they chose flameless electric heat.

"We had heard about it, and we just decided to try it," explained Mrs. Cook. "We're not sorry. Electric heat is so clean, and heat comes fast — and stays even — when you turn up those room thermostats."

There's not a trace of combustion grime in the Silver Bell Ranch home. As in all good construction, the home has a little extra. It has a 6-inch insulation blanket in walls, ceiling and floors. "An extra $200 spent on insulation pays itself back in summer comfort and reduced heating bills, regardless of what type of heating used," said Mr. Cook.

More than 1,000 Nebraskans now heat their homes, offices and buildings with flameless electricity. Why not try it yourself? See us for a free heating survey and cost estimate.
