Plan Tax School At Ainsworth

The University of Nebraska Extension Service will conduct a series of tax schools in Nebraska this month. The schools are designed to train community leaders who will in turn present the information to their neighbors and friends if asked.

Ten residents from Holt county may attend the two-day schools which will be held in Ainsworth February 20 and 27. Subjects to be covered include: state and local principles of public finance, the level of spending as it affects the quantity and quality of government services, some criteria for judging a tax system, and advantages and disadvantages of various types of taxes.

Anyone interested should contact the County Extension office in the Courthouse Annex, O'Neill. Persons attending will be expected to attend both sessions and help present the information obtained to any interested group in the county.

Coon Visits School, Decides Not to Stay

AMELIA - Don Adams, who teaches in the Lone Tree school district, reports a stranger visited at the school last week. Mr. Adams left the room for a few minutes and upon his return, met the pupils leaving in a hurry. A coon had entered the room but after a quick look around, left as quietly as it came.

Teacher and pupils were a little 'shook" but soon recovered.

Verdigre, Nebr. Sat. Feb. 3-62

Dear Friends at the Frontier I must write to tell you that I too saw quite a bunch of the rare birds, the Bohemian wax wings, in our cedar tree which is real close to our east window. I saw them during the real cold spell we had. I could not imagine what kind of a bird they were so I was real glad when I read in our this week's issue of ing them near their Ewing home. They were beautiful as they feasted on the cedar berries, not a colorful bird but so interesting to watch. We enjoy each issue of The Frontier.

Mrs. Louis Speers Verdigre, Nebr.

Chambers, Nebr.

I was very much interested in the account in last week's Frontier of the rare birds seen near the Stanley Lambert home recent-

A few days before The Frontier came out, two ladies in Chambers, Mrs. William Reninger and Mrs. Clarence Wyant, told me about seeing a large flock of strange birds in an apple tree just east of the Reninger Appliance store. The birds had been coming to this tree, where apples had been left out, for about three weeks, appearing first in small numbers and then increasing until they actually counted 90 birds, part on the ground and part in the tree, busy feasting on the apples. These ladies, who are keen bird lovers and observers did not recognize the species. I consulted my bird book and soon decided they were certainly the Waxwing. (Bohemian). The picture and description corresponds exactly with that in The Frontier. This book claims they breed in Western Canada and are irregular visitors to Minnesota and Wisconsin casually appearing farther south

Jesus, I would that I might hear your voice of love and hope and cheer, I'd like to see Your stalwart frame, square-shouldered, upright, void of shame. I'd like to see the verile light that must have shone from Your eyes, as bright as any gleaming, twinkling star that shone from skies afar. The artist's picture You so sad, as never being young and glad. I cannot think their message true; no moping weakling could be You.

No doubt earth's sorrows filled Your heart and caused You aft to go apart and pray that You a light might be by which their errors they might see; and so find happinness and health and all the joys of heavenly wealth; of being kind true and great; of learning love instead of hate; but in Your strength of heart and soul, and brawn, from which no sin took toll

You must have stood a radiant light, a leader fit for any fight. And yet they spurned Your simple plan. They did not want a superman to change their ways and junk their creeds and lead them on to nobler deeds. Oh! Jesus, would the world might see the cure for all its woes in Thee. And yet if You in this our day, should come along the world's highway, would leaders of our present time condemn You for a fan-

While racketeers and gangsters smiled, all blood-stained from somehow, sometime, the world must face about with flags unfurled, and march in line with love and You and learn that only truth is true. Louis E. Holcomb

Mrs. Rouse was born at Nebraska City January 10, 1882 to Mr. and Mrs. Henry Kohler. The family homesteaded near Ewing. Woodstock, Ill., was the birthplace of Mr. Rouse, who was born March 19, 1879 to James R. and Alice Neiburg Rouse. The family moved to West Point in the 1870's.

The family later moved to Long Pine where they lived in a sod house 16 miles from town. Mr. Rouse clearly remembers the Pine Ridge Indian uprising and the blizzard of 1888. They later moved to Norfolk where Mr. Rouse met his bride-to-be.

February 10, 1902 was their wedding date and the wedding; supper was held in Norfolk at the home of Mr. Rouse's parents. Three years later they located near Orchard, then on a farm near Ewing and finally to their present home south of Royal. Mr. Rouse served on the Royal school board for 12 years and
