A Poem Sick and Injured From Mrs. Eby...

—Forgotten Man— You'll not remember me, I fear, the name is Lincoln, a common man from Illinois, uncouth and homely. The times were not so good, men's minds were all in turmoil and so lacking a greater soul to them. They made me president. Myself was of the land and the common clay. Ignorant of statescraft, ignorant of those great things which men admire. The little that I had to offer, was love of peace and since sorrow having been my daily fare, I had a sympathy with sorrow, so what I strove to do in simple fumbling way was to quench the hatred, man for man and class for class. My thoughts were such as my neighbors could understand. I understand that God was God and justice was just. That it was better to pay our honest debts with honest toil, and to me it seemed there should be no north or south, no rich or poor, but only men and women all entitled to such benefits as honor, labor — labor that honesty could earn. Above all things, I love this land where I was born. You may recall once I stood on a battlefield and spoke. I fear no fragments of my words have lived to be remembered. "Nation in liberty conceived and dedicated" so I said, "To the proposition that all men are equal." Then if memory fails me not, with feeble voice and halting style, words which might not be amiss today. "It is for the living to be dedicated, here to the unfinished work, to the great task remaining here before us that from these dead we take increased devotion to the cause, and to resolve that they shall not have died in vain. "But that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and shall never vanish from the earth, government of and for and by the people of this land." It may be you will not remember me. "The name is Lincoln — the forgotten man". (Clarence B Kelland)
