"Where Are They Today?"

Pat Hagerty, O. O. Snyder, E. H. Benedict on the east side of north Fourth street in days gone and forgotten; John Skirving, Cole and Son with watches and clocks, Art Mullen, Mike Harrington,

Tom Golden on the west side of the street. Where are they today? Under the sod up on the hill at rest after playing their part in community life in O'-Neill. I do not think they were all buried where they had lived and worked, but some where in the abode of the dead they are at rest. And the pioneers of other days are gone. Their sons and daughters of a second and third generation and many new comers now walk the streets of O'Neill until their time comes to pass out of the picture. And we all travel to life's journeys end.

A few friends sent me Easter greetings this past month, but none put in a boiled egg. But from my niece, Constance Shanner Evans, back in Washington, our nation's capital city, came a large package of delicious candy. Constance was born in her parents' home on south First street in O'Neill in the 1890's and has spent much of her life in Washington, but retains the generous thoughtfulness of others as her Nebraska heritage. She had been a government worker until retired recently.

Homer Campbell came with his parents from their homestead south of Stuart to O'Neill-about the year 1883, took a job of delivering bread for the town's first little bake shop just across the street to the west from where the K.C. hall now stands. I followed Homer on that bread wagon when he took to the printers trade. Oddly enough the print shop took me in after a time. Homer worked as a type setter in O'Neill, in Atkinson and then in Stuart, going to Sioux City and later to Seattle, Wash., from where in recent times he wrote me every month. But I have had no word from Homer for several months. Has he I wonder been put to rest in the abode of the dead.

Snow and cold of winter now gone, summer skies above and green robed prairieland on earth O'Neill one of these days in person as well as in beneath. The song of birds and hum of prairie life. the sly covote trotting here and there, the bull snake out of it's winter hibernation. Man and beast again on the go and let us go about life's duties another summer time in the fear of the Lord and a hand extended to help some fellow wayfarer.

"Niggers" by the train load are being sent north from southern states. Load them into ships and send them to their native homeland of Africa.

He was born on a farm a few miles southeast of our Capital City, lived there all his life and now in middle life plants that farm ground to crops and gathers in the harvest. Will there be a harvest this time? Not if what this Lancaster county farmer tells me continues. A winter of much snow and ice and as corn planting time comes the ground is dry and baked hard. But it may rain any day and wet us up for another crop growing season in this section of Prairieland. And a young fellow I met with today said he was from North Dakota and was here in college to learn to be a farmer. I told him to go back to his farm home as that was the place to learn to farm, not in a seat in a school room.

Will Lowrie and his wife came down from their abiding place in Minnesota to tarry a while in Nebraska, and then left behind the snow and ice and wintered in San Diego, Calif., where they have a son and then up to the San Francisco bay region where they have a daughter living. In late April Will wrote me a lovely letter. In San Diego they saw and had a visit with two from O'Neill, Will Meals and his sister, Laura. Rev. and Mrs. Lowrie plan te return to Nebraska in mid May, then on to their northern home. Will, like his father before him, devoted his life to pastoring Presbyterian churches and is now retired. Yes, "retired". Here that fatal or joyous day awaits all on the journey of life. The way to escape it is to die young.

The day is done and darkness has come as we stretch out in bed to snore the night away; so the night is done and a rooster loudly crows as morning dawns on the prairie rose.

My good Scotch-Irish friend down at Columbus remembered me recently with a cheering word. A daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Billie Hagerty of days now gone she has cherished memories of her girlhood in O'Neill. And she would love to go down to that depot again and see the afternoon train pull in. But no more, the lady now a housewife in that city by the Platte river and maybe she will get up to

As we travel down life's lengthening lane we pause at times and stand to reach out and grasp the Guiding Hand of a heavenly Friend who guides us to life's journeys end.

Medical Aid For The Aged

Through the welter of words written and spoken care for the aged through higher Social Security taxes, a few facts undisputed by either side are beginning to stand out with increasing clarity. They merit the thoughtful attention of the American

No dispute exists even among sponsors of this proposal, for example, that if it is enacted by Congress, the wage earners of this country would be forced to take another cut in their take-home pay to help finance a program of government medicine that would benefit the rich and well-to-do as well as those who need help.

The King-Anderson Bill (H. R. 4222), which is the vehicle for enactment of this program, proposes a payroll tax increase on employer and worker to provide hospitalization, nursing home and home nursing care available to everyone over 65 eligible for Social Security retirement benefits, regardless of need, regardless of income or other resources.

The list of those entitled to medical benefits under the King-Anderson Bill would include millions of persons over 65 who have protected themselves with health insurance against the cost of illness or injury. More than 9,000,000 of the aged have health insurance. It would include thousands of others who have substantial incomes from investments in stocks and bonds, real estate and business enterprises or have accumulated large savings. It would include high-paid executives who continued working beyond the age of 65.

All these—and they are the majority of the population over 65-would be able to get a free ride for ...eir hospitalization at the expense of the wage earners and their employers if the King-Anderson Bill is enacted.

The American Medical Association has frequentin the current controversy over financing medical ly pointed out that this is the basic issue in the controversy-whether wage earners and their employers should be forced to pay additional taxes to provide medical care for millions of others who are financially able to take care of themselves.

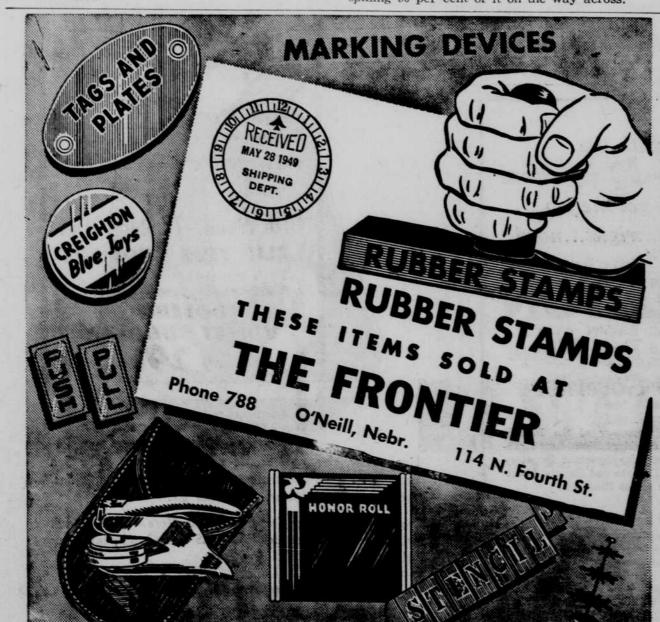

> There is also no dispute over the fact that this program would sooner or later run out of money, requiring further tax increases. Actuaries of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, whose cost estimates are admittedly conservative. acknowledge that within 50 years, the government would be paying out more in benefits under King-Anderson than it would be taking in from taxes for the program.

Private insurance actuaries estimate that the cost of the program would be upwards of three times more than HEW forecasts. If insurance actuaries are correct, the medical benefits fund would be exhausted in about 20 years and higher taxes would be required to keep the program going.

Social Security taxes are already scheduled to keep rising periodically through 1968. With these scheduled increases, and the King-Anderson program added on, wage earners would be paying by the most conservative estimate 76 per cent more tax in 1968 than they paid in 1961.

These facts are unchallenged. On the strength of these facts alone, Congress should not allow itself to be stampeded into enacting an irreversible program of this kind.
