Four grade school boys, Nolan Rundquist, Dean Ennen, George and Martin Waterman, had the surprise of their lives Friday when wading in the creek on the former Will Reece place north of town when they found a buffalo skull. The protruding horn was thought to be a piece of wood, but snapped off when stepped on. The boys then began digging and soon unearthed the top part of the skull with both horns. The bones were brittle and broke easily, and the boys dug out as many as they could and carried them to town putting them on display at Rundquist's store where they are gluing the pieces together.
