A Poem From Mrs. Eby . . .

—My Mother's Face—
Have I with thoughtless fingers penned the writing on her brow? Erased the twinkle from her eyes that should be smiling now? Did I with youthful indifference brush her hair with off glory streak, and boldly with that streak erase the roses from her cheek.
With tons of worry did I crush her heart that bled soft with tears? That paved the way my feet have walked through all the passion years? What can I do? What thought can convey? To show I'm sorry for the years that left her old and gray. To wish that I could stay the time and with my heart erase, Each thoughtless act that I have carved in her old lovely face. In the navy I have bowed in awe before the lashing sea, but I have never been nearer Christ than at my mother's knee.
