Veteran's Day Ignored

EDITOR'S NOTE: A year ago we noticed editorials in several Nebraska newspapers on the lack of proper observance of Veteran's Day. We thought the one in the Sidney Telegraph was especially good. We'd like to re-print it herewith:

The Veterans Day parade in Sidney last Saturday was nothing to strike terror in the hearts of our enemies.

In addition to the fine Sidney band and a sprinkling of Scouts, the parade consisted of the veterans' color guard, the firing squad and a handful of war vets who apparently feel it is important to get out at least once a year to remind people that we've been through some sticky situations in our life-time.

This editorial is not a criticism of those who did or did not appear in the parade. Apparently when a war ends, most men want to come home, store away their mementos and try to forget the experience. We can understand that. However, to us at least, it is important that a few of the veterans remind us that we've come very close to losing our freedom on a number of occasions during the past half century or so.

Perhaps most people feel that Memorial Day in the spring is a proper time to honor our war dead, thus relegating Veterans Day to a secondary role, which it has occupied for the past few years. May we suggest in support of those who still regard Veterans Day as an important holiday that (1) Americans often are too anxious to forget their wartime experiences, thus making us apathetic and vulnerable to serious attack if our enemies should take the nation; (2) Americans are inclined to blush and apologize when someone waves the flag or salutes it or stands at attention while the Star Spangled Banner is being played. These are not things to be ashamed of.

We congratulate the men and women who have known war and are determined that the rest of the people shall not forget that we might get involved in another one if we aren't careful.

MOUND, MINN., MINNETONKA PILOT: "Well, the President now tells us no immediate tax cut is needed to stimulate the economy. It seems as though the boys down in Washington never consider a tax cut unless they feel something is needed to stimulate the economy. . . Tax cut to stimulate the economy? . . . Tax cut to head off a recession? . . . Tax cut to get out of a recession? Nuts! How about a tax cut just because government has gotten into the habit of spending too doggone much money?"

MILES CITY, MONT., DAILY STAR: "The use of the taxpayers' money . . . for such things as a 'Packet for the Bride', now being distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, was related to the House by Rep. Byrnes (R-Wis.) . . . It is an attractive brochure', Rep. Byrnes said, 'with a picture of a demure bride in pink on the cover, and containing 10 agricultural publications and a letter of congratulations from the Secretary of Agriculture. . . If we are going to package things, I would suggest a different kind, something like 'Saving for Taxpayers'."

NORWALK, CONN., THE NORWALK HOUR: "A Civil War Cannon that stands in the Rhode Island capitol in Providence has finally been disarmed, 99 years after it was loaded. Two and a half pounds of black powder were found in it. Naval ordinance experts said it was a miracle some cigar smoking legislator hadn't set it off and collapsed the capitol rotunda as a result. Or even a hard jarring could have done the job, they said. Let's give thanks that the cannon has at last been rendered harmless. And let's grasp the incident as a sign that perhaps the Civil War is finally ending."
