"A penny saved is a penny earned."

—English proverb

The lesson of that nifty phrase (incorrectly attributed to Ben Franklin) is, of course, thrift. Now—how many times a year do we spend money we can't really afford—for things we don't really need?

We're all guilty—we're even encouraged to overspend. But the day of the payoff comes due sooner or later. Either we borrow more, or go bankrupt.

Think on the number of times the government nudges us to spend, and spend—and spend. (Sound familiar?) Think on how the government itself sets the example. Think how often they feed us the pap about spending a couple of more billion to end our aches and pains.

But never, never—not ever—does anyone say where the money's coming from.

You see, with the government it isn't earned money that's being saved—it's new money that hasn't had a chance to be either. The government never learns its lesson at home.

Politics and Business

The principal reason for the present low state of our government is the reluctance of business and professional people and much of our white collar group to engage in politics. We have turned the task of selecting our officials over to the politician, the do-gooder, the moocher and the something-for-nothing camp follower.

The result is that government is denied the guidance of really successful people. When some outstanding business man is induced to accept an appointment he seldom lasts long in the job because his actions are not always politically expedient and he is soon hounded out of his position by the politicians.

Furthermore, because of this reluctance to participate in the rough-and-tumble arena of politics, those who have done the most to bring progress and prosperity to the nation are made the whipping-boys of those who envy their position and success but are unwilling to devote the time, energy and devotion to the job at hand which has brought about this position and success.—Italy (Texas) News-Herald.

Encouraging

Every morning the sun rises, every spring the flowers bloom, every night the Great Dipper is just where it is supposed to be, most parents love their children, 98 per cent of our youngsters are not delinquents, most promises are faithfully kept, and there is still far more love than hate in the world, in spite of all the television and newspaper headlines.—The Pana (Ill.) News-Paladium.

No Hands

There's one thing about that expedition for a closer look at Venus. If she's anything like her statue, at least she won't have a hand out.—Nashville Banner.
