Holt Streams Offer Beauty

By ROMAINE SAUNDERS, Retired, Former Editor The Frontier

LINCOLN-Mrs, Merrill Anderson of Redbird, in a letter to Prairieland Talker, calls attention to nature's lavish adornment at her door.

"We need not travel to faraway places in order to see the beauty of God's creation," she much to offer, especially along our many streams. The historic old Niobrara flows its crystal tide across our ranch here in northern Holt county and contributes to the scenic beauty of these parts. The evergreen pines, the sturdy oaks, stalwart cottonwoods, the lordly elms all grow here. And the wildlings native to our land have their haunts in the dark recesses of the underbrush-something of a paradise for such of the animal kingdom that survive the ruthless hand of man. With a touch of color Mrs. Anderson closes her word picture in a tribute to the birds of prairieland. The Holt county lady with a gift to draw word pictures does not come under the glow eminating from classic halls of learning to the haunts of men, but draws inspiration from beauty seen in God's great outdoors.

Grace Kelly and Margaret Truman each have their man and have walked off the front page where it had all become a bore to newspaper readers. Margaret, as Mrs. Daniel, goes to preside over a home in New York City and Grace with her prince are out at sea before settling down amid gambling casinos.

Referring to a paragraph that appeared in this depatrment recently, a friend writes: "You are right-what have we seen today? We had better smell the flowers while we can."

One of Sen. Frank Nelson's primary opponents was removed by tragedy. Three others seek nomination, four in the district-three Holt county patriots and one from Boyd county. Had Mesdames Cole and McKenna filed for the senatorial nomination they would have added to the fun and given the four men a run for their money. Maybe their time is coming. If Mrs. Orme is elected in the 20th district she would get thrill from having a seat mate from O'Neill.

In the death of J. B. Donohoe of O'Neill and Ivan Dickerson of Atkinson, two more from families of Holt county pioneers pass from the scene. Ivan's people were among the first to be known in the Atkinson community where he spent his writes, "for our own fair state of Nebraska has life and where he leaves those with cherished memories of a friend and worthy citizen. J.B.'s passing follows soon after that of his brother, J. A., and takes out of the community one more from a family planted on Holt county soil by the Gen. John O'Neill colonization of the 1870's. But a child when the family came to prairieland from Pennsylvania, J. B. never felt kindly toward the promoter of that movement. But he, too, lived his life on Holt county prairies and all who knew J. B. esteemed him as a friend and worthy citizen.

> Out of historic New England came the story. The boy is only 11-years-old; he had resented being "spanked." Might well have had more of it, or was parental understanding lacking? With gun in hand the 11-year-old lad went on a killing spree. His mother was the first to fall, then his father, then an older brother. With amazing satisfaction over what he had done he told of plans he had cherished for the triple killings because of home discipline. In Holy Writ a finger is pointed at a generation "without natural affection." Child problem-here is one.

The writer wrote it D. A. The printer punched it out A. D. It matters not, Daniel Augustus Doyle's ghost will not come down Fourth street on a bay gelding on a lope to kick and cuff that printer for garbling the sanctity of its embodied name as was done in the flesh to another printer who had spoken ill through his paper of Colonel Doyle's political activities. The two, now only ghosts, met as that printer came up the steps to the basement of the O'Neill National bank where his little print shop functioned and Gus whaled away with fist and boot. The printer went back down the steps, sat down at his desk and wrote his lead news story, "Kicked and Cuffed by a Big

A cold wind haunts the dull gray April day. A canopy of clouds hangs high above and a dribble of rain is all the day in bringing a mere trace of moisture to thirsty wheat fields in Lancaster county. Broken Bow, out wheer the sandhills begin, where men and women and kids take time to live and chat with a neighbor, reports 10 inches of snowfall this last week in April. The somber hills will be robed in verdant green and golden rod and priarie rose bring bright color to meadow lands when sunbeams have brushed away the snow and chilly winds no longer blow.

Learning how to drive is something new in public school instruction. The student is given a text book in bulk that is comparable to Oloney's arithmetic. Two hours at a sitting in class, 30 minutes at the steering wheel. Fee for 30day course-$20 ad valorem.

It is a peculiar twist when people have to be encouraged to save their own lives.

Enforcing Parental Responsibilty

Not many centuries ago society held parents responsible for the behavior of their children. The power of discipline-extending sometimes to power over life and death-was left in the hands of the family head. Then, however, in the eyes of the law, minor children were little more than chattels of their parents. Ever since western peoples began thinking of children as individuals with rights of their own there has been a question as to the extent of parents' responsibility. The dignity of the individual has been enhanced; but society has not yet found a complete substitute for the old absolute, and sometimes cruel, paternal authority. Evidence of that search can be seen in a bill recently signed into law in New York. It does not hold parents accountable for their children's delinquency, as some may have assumed. However, where a court has found that parental delinquency (usually neglect) has contributed to juvenile delinquency, the law empowers the court to compel cooperation with its orders. If parents should refuse to obey - for instance, to stay home themselves evenings so as to maintain a family circle as competition to the street corners—the court then may punish them. This, of course, is no final answer to juvenile delinquency. But the workings of this law will be watched widely and with great interest.
