Seaton Skyrockets in 3 Years

LINCOLN—The rapid rise of Fred Seaton, Hastings publisher, to a seat on the cabinet of President Eisenhower after less than three years with the administration, has been the result of hard work.
 Seaton, who began to emerge in politics in Kansas in 1932, was one of the first men to urge Mr. Eisenhower to seek the presidency.
 In 1953, Mr. Eisenhower called on the energetic Seaton to become assistant secretary of defense for legislative and public affairs. His long career in the publishing business, his senate term and experience in the Nebraska legislature, aided him in that position.

Seaton, while in the statehouse as a Nebraska lawmaker, was an energetic, capable state senator. He was chairman of the legislative council during his second term in the unicameral, in which he served from 1945-48.
 Last year, the president moved Seaton to the white house as a deputy assistant.
 Then, to the surprise of Seaton, he was nominated by the president to hold down the controversial cabinet post of secretary of the interior.
 He is the third Nebraskan to hold a cabinet post. Herbert Brownell, attorney-general and Nebraskan, is also in the cabinet, but he was a practicing New York attorney before the appointment.

Seaton is a veteran of politics and began handling many knotty ones for the president when he first ran for office. He was in the forefront of the intricate maneuvering of the republicans in the controversy over the nation's farm problem.
 He now will tackle what is considered the second big domestic problem for Mr. Eisenhower, matters coming under jurisdiction of the interior department.
 Observers who have watched the career of Seaton, feel he will handle the latter job in his usual capable manner, with the least amount of controversy.

State Government Changes
 There have been some more changes in personnel in the statehouse, again in major offices.
 Melvin O. Steen, 59, was named by the state game commission as its executive secretary, succeeding the late Paul Gilbert. A veteran of 26 years in the development of a number of wildlife projects throughout the nation, Steen has for the past 12 years been chief of the Missouri conservation commission's fish and game division.
 Officially, Steen begins his new job on July 1, at a salary of $10,500 per year.
 Says Steen: "I'm happy to come to Nebraska. The state has excellent wildlife possibilities and I want to help give the people the best facilities possible."
 Steen has promised an efficient administration and further development of fish and wildlife resources.

"I'll do the best job I can," Steen said. "But one man can't do it all. I'm hoping for cooperation from everyone in the state."

In another important change, Carl Deitemeyer of Lincoln was elected chairman of the state board of educational lands and funds, which supervises state-owned school land.
 Deitemeyer of Lincoln will serve until October 1 when the board holds its annual organization meeting.
 He replaces Tom Coffey of Alma, who now is top man in the state purchasing department, which handles buying for state agencies and offices.
 William Minier of Omaha was elected by the board to succeed Deitemeyer as vice-chairman.
 There also has been a change in the sprawling agriculture department, headed by Ed Hoyt.
 Hoyt named Dwight Lambert head of the seed division, to replace Robert Colborn, who resigned the post he has held for nine years, to enter private business.
 Lambert has been chief of the noxious weed division in his new post. Lambert will be chief of both departments. Colborn was paid $5,100 per year.
 Lambert has been receiving the same pay but probably will get more money, Hoyt said, for handling both jobs.
 "We hope to have close cooperation between the seed and weed divisions," Hoyt said, "and believe the two can work very well together."

When coordination of the two divisions is completed, the agriculture director said, operating costs should be less than when each was under a separate chief.

MORE state capitol Highway Commission
 The advisory state highway commission has made its first departure from past stands in the matter of adding roads to the state-maintained network.
 The commission voted unanimously to put the road between Anselmo and Victoria Springs state park back on the state system. It was removed by the 1955 legislature.

Explaining its action, the commission said the state has spent considerable money in improving the park, visited annually by more than 30,000 persons.
 If the road had not been restored to the state system, the county would have had to assume the responsibility for its upkeep.
 And, at its regular meeting, the commission was told by State Engineer L. N. Ress that the highway department is considering renumbering state highways.
 Many have been dropped from the state system and Ress said by renumbering the department would not have to use very many numbers with three digits.
 All state highways, he said, could be kept under 100, he said, would give more readable road signs, and save some money. In addition, he said, there would be more order to the state road network.

 In many states, Ress said, even numbered roads run one direction across a state, and odd-numbered ones, the opposite.

 PAGE—For oldtimers who like to reflect on "the good old days" and for those late-comers to the Page community who never knew the town in its heyday, a photo has been dug up proving that once-upon-a-time this was a factory town.

A cement factory once flourished here under the ownership of Jim Allen, grandfather of Jerome Allen. Site of the factory was where the present day locker plant is located.
 Cement blocks and cement posts (some of the posts still are to be seen at culvert locations on abandoned highways) were turned out in quantity for a time.
 Herb Stevens recalls that a highly desirable contract for the manufacture of cement culverts was awarded to a rival firm—much to the chagrin of the Page industrialist. Failure to get that contract speeded the demise of the plant.

Some readers might identify a relative or an acquaintance of yesteryear. The picture was taken in the early 1900's.
 "Fellow citizens, be proud of your town. It once was a manufacturing center!" declares Mr. Stevens.
