Wind - Testers Getting Ready
(Photos below)
A group of scientists and technicians, mostly civilian, are busily readying the wind test site, five miles northeast of here, for Operation Prairie Grass. This is the second wind study to be conducted at O'Neill under the sponsorship of the Air Force-Cambridge research center at Cambridge, Mass. Under contract with the air force for phases of the problems are Massachusetts A&M college.

Two O'Neill firms, Harry R. Smith Implements and Northwest Electric company, modified conventional equipment to bury three miles of electric insulated cable for the test. The cable was placed about one foot below the surface to enable electricity to be provided to the huts and to the test equipment. Mr. Smith and Bill Fritts modified the machines. Power is supplied by REA.

A wind sampling network has been devised. The samplers are glass and are equipped with vacuum hose and copper tubing.

"Looks like part of a milking machine," explained Jaymes Murphy, who visited the site, which is located on J. B. Ryan estate property.
