The Frontier Woman Cook Spuds with Jackets On

This is the time of year when the homemaker needs to save all the time and labor that she can. Here are some ideas to help you out.

If you make a gelatin salad, double the recipe if your family is large enough. Serve it the first day for two meals, then serve something else the next day for a salad, but on the third day, go back and serve portions of the first salad. Thus you will have saved time and work.

Cook a whole kettle of potatoes with the jackets on. Rice enough for the first meal (the jackets will stay in the rice). After lunch, peel the skins from the potatoes and use enough of them to make a potato salad for supper. Or use part of them for hash browns. Next day, try dicing some of them and covering with a cheese sauce and brown in the oven until thoroughly heated through. Hash browns can be served again, or they can be used as part of the ingredients of a casserole dish with other vegetables added. You will thus have saved extra time, extra dish washing and a lot more extra labor than if you had stopped to fix potatoes fresh for each meal. Suitable refrigeration is necessary, of course.

Most gardens aren't furnishing new potatoes yet so serve macaroni, spaghetti, or rice in place of potatoes. Cook more than enough macaroni. Serve half of it for lunch and save the other half for salad the next day. You can add slivers of cooked meat, celery, perhaps canned salmon flakes. Blend the salad together hard boiled eggs, onion, pickle, with salad dressing and be sure to make it far enough ahead to give the flavors a chance to develop and mingle.

Consult your freezer book. There are meats that can be cooked and half of them frozen for later use. This is also true of any soup that doesn't contain potatoes. I always cook enough bean soup for two or three meals, then freeze part of it.

Half a cake can be frozen if your family is too small to use it all. A good deal of baking can be done in one day and the most of it frozen. Use your head and your freezer to save you a lot of work. Make several eggs into noodles instead of just one and dry the remainder of the noodles. Be sure they are perfectly dry before storing them in glass fruit jars.

'Awaiting Stork'
Wins Subscription—
Dear Mrs. Pease:
Recently, several ladies had a pink-and-blue shower for me. They had some very clever games and ideas that I thought I'd pass on to your readers. It seems every paper you read there is a stork shower and no doubt the hostesses would like some new games.

On the invitations, they asked the guests to wrap their gifts in a yard of white outing flannel and to pin the flannel with safety pins. So this will mean more diapers for the bundle of joy. After the guests have arrived, give each one a spring clip clothespin. This they clip onto their clothing and they are to watch the other guests to see that they don't cross their legs. If they do, they can collect their clothespin. The one who has collected most clothespins by the end of an allotted time is the winner and is given a small prize.

For games, list all the song titles with "baby" in them. For example, "Baby Face" and "Baby, It's Cold Outside." Another game is to take the given name of the prospective father and mother and see how many given names can be made by using the letters in their names.

It seems as though all showers have scrambled words and this one was no exception. The scrambled words and the answers were: Alosphit, hospital; tleytae, layette; rodwep, powder; amroulf, formula; hemrot, mother; codori, doctor; pradie, diaper; oimokn, kimono; toleob, bootie; tsenatsl, bassinet.

This was all the games, but one guest had a cute little rattle pinned on her package to add a little color.

I heard over the radio yesterday that the given names, John and Mary, have stepped down from the top 10 names and the most popular names of today are Robert and Linda.

Good luck to all the future parents and babies.
