High Court Rules in Amelia's Favor

ment gave the Amelia high school a new lease on life and cause for informal celebration when folks gathered round the piano and sang. Even the bent old grandfathers were visibly elated.

Said the high school teacher, Duane Carson: "Folks fought for something they really believed in."

Thomas Doolittle, member of the board of education: "We have four little girls. This means they can be at home, with their parents, that much longer. It's been my contention all along we should be entitled to send them to high school where we wish—that happens to be right here at home."

"Just last week we had to bulldoze a road open, just as we have to do every winter, all winter. And in the spring it's the eternal mud. It's the road that State Engineer L. N. Ress said was a 'reasonably improved' highway."

'Remote Areas'
Mrs. Glen White offered this: "At one of the hearings the state education officers told us: 'You shouldn't live in such remote areas if you want to stay out of such situations.' I resented that attitude."

(It was Mrs. White's repeated letters to the Public Publisher of the Omaha World-Herald that first attracted statewide interest in the Amelia situation.)

On the administrative side of Amelia's question—apart from the road question—Judge Paul W. White in Lancaster district court set aside Amelia's petition questioning the action of the state board of education.

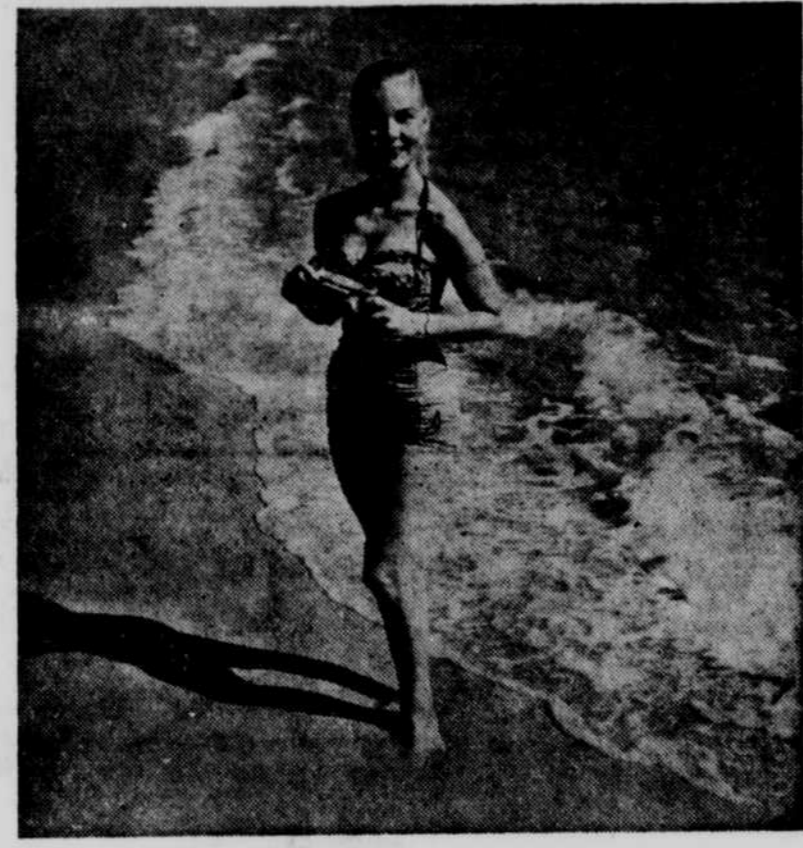

Commissioner Decker, in a letter to the Frontier, declared: "Honestly, it does not hurt my feelings to have the high court rule against me. I have had it happen before, and it probably will happen again. Our only concern in this or any other school matter is that children in 1957 get a 1957 type of education. We have some of the finest schools in the nation right here in Nebraska, and we have others in which I know the children are being cheated."

Singles Out Praise
The Frontier's Amelia correspondent, Miss Florence Lindsey, summed it up this way: "The best news of the year for the Amelia folks was the supreme court's ruling on the road. 'The entire community feels like special thanks should be given to Lloyd Waldo and Clyde Widman, who have attended all kinds of hearings and conferences and have given much of their time, money and effort. 'Others helped in any way they could. 'Everyone at Amelia is very happy!'"

SUN, SURF AND SNAPSHOTS

This glamour girl came fully prepared for a day at the beach, with a camera to record the sun fun. There's always a wealth of picture-taking possibilities at the seashore or lakeside, because people are relaxed and enjoying themselves, there are no troubles about lighting, and the background of blue water and fleecy white clouds is ideal. Vacationists who follow the few simple rules that come with every roll of film will have pictures that will keep summer's enjoyment alive the year around.

A word of caution: the light near the water can fool you. The bright sky and the sun reflecting from sand and waves makes the light much stronger than you think. Always treat beach pictures as bright, not average, subjects. And when trying some glamour shots of your wife or best girl, avoid the noonday sun. Light coming from directly overhead casts black shadows around the eyes and squinting by the model. It's better to take shoreline pictures of people in morning or afternoon.

Halibut Checks As Lenten Delicacy

WITH Lent in the offing housewives and chefs the world over are on the lookout for new fish dishes or new ways to prepare old standbys.

Chefs on Canadian National Railways dining cars operating in British Columbia, tell of one of the least known but tastiest delicacies to come from the Pacific fishing ground—halibut cheeks.

Halibut cheeks are literally what the name implies—the jaw muscles found on either side of the halibut's head, says C.N.R. dining car Chef Bruno W. Barembuch, who runs between Prince Rupert and Jasper. At Prince Rupert, local gourmets have told Chef Barembuch, "Halibut cheeks are a new adventure in eating."
