I want to congratulate the Reverend from Omaha for that fine talk that he gave on the "Voice of the Frontier" on Saturday morning, about the state of Nebraska. I think that was the best biggest little talk and advertisement for the state that anyone could give.

I think all of the newspapers in the state should print that talk.

Yours truly,
N. E. BAKER

P. S.: Don't forget to print it yourself.

(Editor's note: The speaker was Rev. W. O. Samuelson, Baptist minister, Omaha. His talk was impromptu and "live" on Saturday's "Voice of the Frontier" program, and no script is available.)

Pressure Cookers Date Back to Napoleon

Pressure canning, the predecessor of today's pressure cooker, was used way back in 1810 to feed Napoleon's fast-moving army. Almost two centuries before that, an inventor by the name of Denis Papin developed what he called a "Marmite Digestor". He had to abandon experiments because poor pressure and heat regulation resulted in accidents.

When home pressure cookers first became popular, insurance claims were apt to read, "Allowance for scraping approximately one-quarter inch layer of peas from ceiling. Cause of accident. Answered telephone and forgot pressure cooker." Some insurance claims were far from comical—for either faulty equipment or inexperienced handling caused serious accidents.

One of the strong proponents of safety in pressure cookers was Alfred Visser, Jr., who as early as 1925 experimented with the first pressure saucepan ever made. This resulted, some ten years later, in the Flex-Seal

Speed Cooker that is all stainless steel—right down to the safety door. Mr. Visser realized the closure of a pressure cooker had to be so designed that the pressure within the cooker would keep the cover locked. To open the cooker, the cover would be moved inwardly against the outwardly expanding steam pressure. In other words, the cover would have to fit inside of the cooker.

Today, Mr. Visser's invention is one of the most popular pressure cookers on the market. To its initial important safety features has been added streamline design in modern stainless steel. Foods, such as the delectable roast of pork pictured, cook in minutes rather than hours. Cleanup time is shortened considerably because stainless cooking utensils don't require scouring. Hot, sudsy water will whisk away all except food that is burned on. Even here, don't reach for the steel wool—soaking or a mild abrasive will do the job just as well and be easier on the gleaming stainless steel.
