Siding Celebrates Silver Anniversary

One of America's most popular building materials—asbestos-cement siding—is celebrating its 25th anniversary this fall. Since their introduction in 1912, enough asbestos-cement siding shingles have been made to side approximately 7,000,000 homes.

Asbestos-Cement siding is made of two almost indestructible materials: Asbestos fibers and portland cement. The combination of these make an almost ideal home building material for asbestos-cement is completely fire-safe, cannot rot, rust or corrode. It does not need painting for preservation but if a color change is desired it can be painted. Exposure to weather cannot destroy it and it is immune to attacks by rodents and termites.

Today's asbestos-cement siding has come a long way from the crude, gray units first put on the market 25 years ago. The 1937 product represents the result of years of laboratory and field research. The past eighteen months have witnessed the introduction of a wide variety of new colors, textures and sizes in asbestos-cement siding.

Asbestos-Cement manufacturers have developed an important application method, emphasizing the horizontal shadow lines between siding courses. This new application method is becoming more and more popular with home builders throughout the country, because the shadow line treatment adds interest and character to home exteriors. The deep shadow line effect is achieved through the use of a fiberboard shingle backer or nailing strip under the asbestos-cement siding. The fiberboard backer provides insulation and makes exterior walls more weatherproof. Both methods meet the standards and requirements for use on homes financed by the F.H.A.

Home builders now have a choice of a wide variety of colors and sizes of asbestos-cement siding. One of the best sellers of the new styles is a narrow-width, longer-length size which can be applied clapboard fashion and is especially adaptable for the ranch-type homes so popular today. The 12 x 24 inch size is still used on most homes. To complete the selection there are oversized units to meet other architectural requirements. The rigid sizes reduce the number needed and simplify application procedure.

New colors range from pastels to deeper tones and include such shades as green, blue, coral, brown, ivory, grey, and white. The new surface textures emphasize both vertical and horizontal striations. Many have a glazed surface, smooth to the touch. As a result of recent developments and innovations, a new dimension has been added to home building exteriors.
