3 in Family TB Sufferers

George Hammond, "Voice of The Frontier" announcer, was on hand with the special events unit and had a chat with Mr. and Mrs. Parker, Maurice Graham, Rev. M. H. Grosenbach, pastor of nearby Center Union church, and Mrs. Thomas. The tape-recorded interviews were reboarded on the Wednesday, November 21, "Voice" program (WJAG, 780 kc, 9:45 a.m.)

Mrs. Thomas is the former Nellie Harrison, who has lived in northern Holt virtually all of her life. Her husband originally came from Virginia.

Their eldest son, Estel, who is married, lives nearby, and has been of great help to his folks.

Robert was stricken July 26, 1950. He was treated for a time at Hot Springs, S.D., and was subsequently transferred to Minneapolis. He was an agriculture student at South Dakota State college, Brookings, when TB appeared. "Bob" is a World War II veteran.

Vonda, who was to have been an O'Neill high school junior in the 1951-'52 term, went to the Kearney hospital September 15. And little more than a month later Mr. Thomas was admitted to the TB hospital. What accounts for the incidence of TB in the family is not established.

Three of the Thomas girls are teaching school.

The Thomases have been residing on the present place 3 years. Previously they resided farther to the northeast.

Ironically, the Thomas TB story gets the spotlight as the annual sale of tuberculosis Christmas seals gets underway.

"The TB disease is no respecter of persons," said Miss Bernadette Brennan, Holt drive chairman. "We need your help!"

Out of Old Nebraska. . . Brick - Making Lagged Lumber

By DR. JAMES C. OLSON Supt. State Historical Society

The pioneer towns of territorial Nebraska created a heavy demand for building materials of all sorts. Prior to the coming of the railroad, all building material that could not be produced locally had to be brought up the Missouri river by steamboat.

This was expensive as well as slow, and very early the Nebraska pioneers made strenuous efforts to supply their building material locally insofar as possible.

The sawmills discussed in an earlier column developed to meet this demand.

Another type of building material in demand in Nebraska was brick, although local suppliers do not seem to have developed so rapidly in this field as they did in the lumber business.

At least in 1860 the territory had only one brick-making establishment significant enough to be listed in the federal census of that year. It was located in Cass county.

It had a capital investment of $250, employed 6 men and produced $600 worth of bricks per year.

Though this establishment was small enough, I would hazard the guess that other Nebraska communities also had brick makers during the 1850's.

Many of the early concerns were very small and burned only enough for a few buildings. On occasion, a kiln would be improvised in order to burn brick for a single building.

By 1870, the industry had picked up considerably. Federal census of that year shows a total of 17 brick-making establishments in the new state of Nebraska.

They employed 109 persons, to whom they paid a total of $20,874 in annual wages.

The total capital value of the industry in the state was $22,900, and the annual value of the brick amounted to $61,865.

There is some discrepancy in the figures reported in the census of 1870. The breakdown by counties accounts for only 10 of the 17 establishments listed in the general statement covering the industry.

Of these, 3 each were in Dakota and Richardson counties, and two each in Dodge and Douglas.

The county enumeration, for example seems to have missed the brick-making industry flourishing in Nebraska City.

At least in the summer of 1865, more than 1,000 cords of wood were piled up there, ready for use in burning brick, and the Nebraska City News estimated that several million bricks would be burned during the season.

Building stone was available in certain sections of Nebraska, and some of the brick-making establishments also dealt in that commodity.
