Prairieland Talk

Yes, Christmas has commercial significance, maybe overdone a little. But who would raise an impious hand to tear it from the calendar. In a world submerged in hatreds men and women of good will can find solace in turning once more to the sacred volume and hear anew the message of the celestial visitor: "Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people, for unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." Above the world's depressing shadows in silent splendor and today we look beyond the shadows.

According to Attorney-General Beck, the son or daughter not financially able to support a parent and the parent receives the old age assistance, if the son or daughter later becomes able to provide for the parent they are liable for all that the parent has received from the assistance funds. Rather a screwy provision of the law.

An astute grandma makes this observation: The old fashioned girl who darned her husband's socks now has a daughter who socks her darned husband.

An Iowa patriot is for universal military training if the ages are 17 to 80 years and include the women; 6 weeks training in camp and 30 days in the forefront of battle guaranteed to produce a peace treaty with teeth in it. That's all right if he will include the politicians in the battle zone.

Efforts to think straight in a world gone mad are all but futile. To sit down and lure to your confused mind a profound thought is no longer the fun it once was. So you turn to the back page of the evening paper and join in the nonsense with Mutt and Jeff.

If you would arrive where you can rest on settled convictions, don't be afraid to listen to the guy that you do not agree with. You might awaken to some important if disagreeable truth.

Preholiday Quiet Pervades Capitol

LINCOLN—A preholiday quiet overlay the Nebraska political scene this week after one of the most hectic periods statehouse old-timers could recall.

The week ended with Gov. Val Peterson still undecided which way to turn in his senatorial candidacy; stay in the race with Sen. Hugh Butler for the white-haired Omahan's regular 6-year term, or challenge Former Gov. Dwight Griswold for the 2-year job?

The problem is a toughie. And there's plenty of pressure on both sides with the governor almost squarely in the middle. Pushing him for the 6-year term are persons who were originally Griswold supporters, but shifted their backing to Peterson when he became governor and Griswold temporarily abandoned the political field.

On the other side are the Omaha-led Butler forces who want the governor to duck the collision with Butler and clash with Griswold, whom they describe as a much easier opponent.

Obviously, both factions want their man to have a comparatively free field. Both Butler backers and the Griswold group say their candidate can beat Peterson but they're working overtime to see that the race doesn't come off.

Persons who know the governor well don't pretend to know what he's going to do. One advisor concedes that Butler's strength in Omaha, where about a 5th of the vote is cast, is a big factor in the argument that Peterson should run for the short term. On the other hand, Peterson is known to feel that if he knocked out Butler, he'd really be the champion, whereas there would be less glory in a win over Griswold. By the same token, a defeat by Griswold would be humiliating.

Swinging—

Griswold came out of his corner, swinging at the governor. In his announcement of his candidacy, he made this statement: "I am sure it will be found from the record that during my 6-year term (as governor) there were fewer state employees than there were under my predecessor (Democrat Roy Cochran) or under my successor (Peterson) and it is by studying the number of public employees that judgment can best be made as to whether economy is a fundamental belief."

To be perfectly fair, it would have to be pointed out that much of the time Griswold was in office was during the war when it was impossible to do much traveling, to build roads, or to perform several other functions of government. And, so according to the state tax commissioner's office, no records are kept during Griswold's administration of the number of state employees, so the record is difficult to check.

Peterson, who was Dwight Griswold's private secretary in the governor's office, declined to comment on his former boss' filing.

Griswold had no secret of the fact that he had hoped Peterson would appoint him—instead of Fred Seaton—to the interim senate post.

Many Nebraska republicans are unhappy at the prospect of a Peterson-Griswold fight. "It won't prove anything," moaned one man friendly to both, "they both stand for the same things."

Senator—

Nebraska's newest senator is a handsome, youthful-looking ex-Kansas whose appointment ended 11 days of guessing. Fred Andrew Seaton, who thinks of himself as an "optical middle-of-the-roader," told newsmen:

"While many of my friends worked zealously to secure this appointment, I made absolutely no personal effort toward that end. That means I will go to Washington with an open mind and free hands, which the governor wanted I am sure, and without which I could not have accepted the appointment."

Seaton said that under no circumstances would he be a candidate to succeed himself.

Wrangle—

The state board of control has found itself in a damned-if-you-do and damned-if-you-don't position. Acting largely under pressure from county commissioners, and from the threat of a legislative crackdown, the board several weeks ago hired Myer Avedochech as the $8,000-a-year business consultant to the aid program. Avedochech, with the unanimous support of 2 advisory committees—one county aid directors and one representing commissioners—proposed an overhauling of the organizational setup of the assistance department.

First reaction from the most officials was good. Then from recipients themselves and from Tom Condon, chairman of the Gage county board of supervisors, same complaints. Boiled down, the gripes were aimed at Mrs. Mary Prince, chairman of the board of control.

Condon charged that Mrs. Prince had "steamrollered" the organizational plan through and said she was dictating to the other 2 board members, Tom Dredia and William Diers.

This week, the reorganizational plan was still going ahead.

Try Again—

First round of Nebraska's school land lease squabble went to the state board of educational lands when a 3-judge federal court in Omaha denied the injunction against auctions sought by William Probst, of Grant. But the leaseholders squared off this week for a second round. On file in district court here is a motion for a new trial and a spokesman for the leaseholders association said his group planned to take the battle to the U. S. supreme court, if necessary.
