If you're tired of groping in the dark for a light switch or string, try pointing these items with luminous paint. The glow will make it simple to turn on the lights without searching all over the room.

And, by the way, you can get plastic protectors to go around the light switches so they won't be smudged with fingerprints.

Don't throw away that old jug. Maybe you can make it into a decorative lamp for the kid's room, or for pop's den.

When you go to the dime store buy a package of yellow scratch paper and a pair of blunt-pointed scissors. Get some sharp enough to cut folded paper 3 or 4 times. Cut the paper into squares. Fold a square from corner to corner 3 or 4 times, then give it to one of the children. Tell them to cut the square several times. When they unfold it they will be amused to see the design they have made. Cutting squares like this will often keep small fry busy.

You can keep the tops of salt shakers from rusting by painting the insides with clear nail polish. When it is dry use a darning needle to open up the holes.

Plaid blankets that are beginning to wear thin, can be made into bathrobes for the youngsters. Use the good parts of the blanket. A child's coat pattern can serve as a guide if you don't have a bathrobe pattern.

Bound hand and foot— HOLD-UP VICTIM INVENTS NEW WAY TO DIAL

NIGHT OPERATOR Florence Schmitt* strained to hear the words that came over her headpiece.

"Send police," yelled the faraway voice, "to the Budget Hosiery Shop on 8th Street!"

Operator Schmitt swiftly relayed the call, sent Patrolman John Rogers rushing to the rescue. Arriving, he found store manager Sam Lyman—tied to a pipe by thieves who had looted the store. Unable to free himself, Lyman had used his head... and the telephone... to summon help. Stretching as far as his bonds allowed, he'd knocked the receiver off the nearby telephone and dialed "0" for Operator with his tongue!

*The names have been changed; the story is true.

It costs that much each year—$25,000,000 for this company—just to keep the average phone and all the equipment behind it in good working order... in testing, inspection, maintenance, repairing storm damage. Your telephone company must earn enough to keep telephone service good and keep it growing.

Let's Make Pressed Veal—
Get 4 pounds of veal shoulder or shank meat and knuckle bone from the butcher. Cover meat and bone with water. Add 1/2 cup carrots, 1/4 cup chopped onion. 1/4 cup celery and allow to simmer until the meat is tender. Drain and reserve the broth. Let the broth simmer until it is reduced to 1 cup. Strain, cool and skim it. Dice or grind the meat and add to broth. Season with salt and pepper. Decorate the mold with slices of 3 hard cooked eggs. Pack in veal mixture and chill.
