

Will Open Entire State for Pheasants

10-Day Season in Zone Two

Nebraska's two-zone pheasant season scheduled to begin on October 17 marks the first year since 1948 that the entire state has been opened to pheasant hunting. The severe 1948-'49 blizzard ravaged the north central part of the state, killing many pheasants and necessitating closed areas.

The state is divided into two zones this year with identical beginning season dates but different closing dates. Zone two of the state, smallest of the two zones and comprised of Holt, Boyd, Blaine, Brown, Cherry, Garfield, Grant, Hooker, Keya Paha, Loup, Rock, Thomas and Wheeler counties, has a 10-day season, beginning on October 17 and ending on October 26. The bag and possession limit is two cock pheasants.

Zone one consisting of the remaining 80 counties in the state, also begins on October 17 but ends on November 23. There the bag and possession limit is four cock pheasants.

Shooting hours in both zones are from sunrise to sunset.

Deadline Near on Deer Permits

More than one thousand applications for deer permits were received by the Nebraska game commission during the past week, skyrocketing the total number of applicants for each type of permit to 2,248 for bucks and 1,560 for does.

Only a few days remain before the application deadline. No applications postmarked after August 10 can be accepted.

The drawing to determine the holders of the 1,500 doe permits and the 1,000 doe permits will be held Tuesday, Sept. 16 in the State House. The public is invited to attend.

Nebraska's buck season gets underway December 1 and ends on the 7th.

It was the seventh time in eight years that Jaskowski and Golden battled it out in the finals of the championship flight. "Scovie" finished in one over par.
