Good Lord Blesses 'Cinderella' with Good Garden; Larder Now Ready for Winter
 By BLANCHE SPANN PEASE

Do the children take a vacuum bottle to school, or does dad or teacher carry lunch and use a vacuum bottle, too? Be sure to give them proper care for best results.

Liquids to be kept hot, should be poured into the bottle as hot as possible. Previous warming of the interior improves the results and eliminates danger of breakage.

Cold liquids should be poured into the bottle as cold as possible. Maybe you can add some ice cubes.

In all cases, cork the bottle tightly. Do not drive the cork in with a blow from the hand. If forced in too tight this will break the bottle. Put in with a screw motion.

Do not subject the bottle to a sudden change in temperature. If the bottle has contained hot liquids, the immediate insertion of cold liquids should be avoided.

To clean the bottle, use warm water with bicarbonate of soda. That's plain baking soda. Do not submerge the bottles in water when cleaning as liquids should be prevented from seeping through the joints into the metal barrel. Periodically, unscrew metal shoulder, remove filler, and clean out interior of barrel.

If the bottle accidentally becomes sour or foul, a good way to clean it is to tear up a few scraps of paper, place in the bottle, add a solution of bicarbonate of soda, shake around and then pour out. After cleaning, be sure and vice versa.

The inner portion of the vacuum bottle being of glass, care should be taken to avoid knocks, falls and jars. Handle the bottle with the same care you give to a drinking glass and it will give long and useful service.

to rinse thoroughly with hot water. Sterilize cork by boiling it. When not in use, the vacuum bottle should be left open to air, and dry both bottle and cork. This is important and necessary to keep both sweet and clean.

It is recommended to cover cork with oiled paper, keeping it from absorbing liquids and prolonging its usefulness.

'Cinderella' Wins Subscription—
 Dear Mrs. Pease:
 It's been a long time since I've written you, and we always enjoy your corner. With the coming fast drawing to a close and an afternoon off, I will try to get some of the neglected mail answered.

The wind is hot and we could use a nice shower for the new rye and wheat, but the corn is enjoying every day of it. Fall is already here as one sees yellow and brown leaves skipping down the road, the youngsters hurry along carrying their school lunch boxes, and mother is kept busy planning for the next day.

One hears so much about the high cost of living now days, sometimes when we have convinced ourselves that the food costs are down, we get a jolt and have to pay more for the weekly groceries. But we have battled with the food problem for so long, that we don't pay much attention to the store prices.

Long ago we found that we could help ourselves by having a good garden, and this was the one year that the good Lord has blessed us with an abundance of everything. I have canned all summer. Started out in the spring with a new pressure cooker on the asparagus, then next came the strawberries. We canned, froze, made preserves, and ate all we wanted fresh. Then came the beans, tomatoes and corn. The pickle supply was replenished with a nice lot of sweet pickles, the cabbage is ready for the kraut jar, a goodly supply of new jellies has been made, and we feel safe and secure in having something to eat this winter.

We enjoy our yard, garden and the flowers beyond measure. We are still having rose-moss, dahlias, petunias and marigolds and will miss them when Jack Frost makes his first visit. The potatoes have been dug and we have them tucked away in the cave with the rest of the summer's labors.

We never run out of a job as the sewing machine will be brought out and we'll make two dresses along with seeds of other sewing to be done, that we have neglected for the garden.

We are having our first meal of soup for supper, made from vegetables, and it is on cooking. It's about done, so will hurry along.
