

Confirmed Krautmaker Passes Along Fine Points of Curing and Canning

By BLANCHE SPANN PEASE

Don't look now, but it's gotten around to time to make kraut—if you are a kraut maker at heart. My mother claims that the flavor of canned, commercial boughten kraut cannot hold a candle to homemade kraut.

In any case, if you want to make sauerkraut, you'll want to have an idea of how to go about it and how much salt to use in conjunction with the cabbage.

You'd best remove all outside leaves of the cabbage heads down to the firm, fresh, hard cabbage. Then quarter and core. Use a kraut cutter and shred. Thoroughly mix a cup of salt with each 20 pounds of cabbage. Pack firmly into a stone jar and cover with a wooden lid or dinner plate, which fits down in the inside of the container. Place a fruit jar filled with water on the lid, to hold the kraut under the brine which forms as the salt draws juice from the cabbage. Keep at a temperature of about 86 F. Remove the skum each day.

When it is cured, at our house we like to can it, as there is much less waste that way.

To do so, pack it in hot quart or pint glass jars and be sure there is enough juice to cover the kraut. If not, make brine by dissolving two tablespoons salt in a quart of water. Process the kraut 30 minutes in a hot water bath, then complete seal.

Hi, Ho Time When Kin Comes
Dear Mrs. Pease:
I was just reading your appeal in The Frontier for letters: I'm not too good at letter-writing, but will try.

We were all glad to see the haying season come to an end. I felt like taking a slow boat to China before the haying was done, but now it's behind us.

We certainly have a high old time when our nieces and nephews come to visit, as they have been. Something is going on all the time.

Good manners is the art of making others comfortable when they are around you.

BOHEMIAN COFFEE CAKE
Three cups sifted flour, one cup brown sugar, one cup white sugar, ½ teaspoon salt, ½ cup butter, one cup dates (chopped), one cup nuts (chopped), one cup buttermilk, one teaspoon soda dissolved in cup of milk. Combine dry ingredients, except soda, cut shortening through dry mixture, about like corn meal. Remove ¼ cup mixture for topping, add dates and nuts to larger mixture. Add sour milk to which soda has been added. Spread in 8x10-inch pan, greased. Sift on top. Very good, hot or cold. Bake 40 to 45 minutes in 350 F. oven.
