

Neighbors Pick for Russell, Hesse

Do Hurryup Job for Victims

PAGE—Twenty-one neighbors gathered at the Charles Russell home Wednesday, October 22, to finish picking his corn. There were seven pickers and a number of tractors, wagons and elevators.

Those present were Glen and Ed Stewart, Edgar, Dale and Marvin Stauffer, Edward Sukup, George and Kenneth Wettlaufer, Melvin Carson, Jerry Summers, Roy Hansen, Roy Schlacht, Daniel Page, George Heggenmeyer, Pete Mizner, Frank Beelaert, Bill Buxton, Lester Waterman, John Zumburum, Darrell Hesse and Willis Russell.

Neighboring ladies who helped Mrs. Russell prepare and serve the dinner were Mrs. Edward Sukup, Mrs. George Wettlaufer, Mrs. Dale Stauffer, Mrs. Edgar Stauffer, Mrs. Melvin Carson, Mrs. John Zumburum and Mrs. Mrs. Alvin Hesse. After the pickers finished Mr. Russell's corn, they pulled into Gus Hesse's field where they finished his picking. Mr. Hesse is confined in the Lutheran hospital at Norfolk following an asthma attack. Mr. Russell was injured in a car-truck accident.

Gold Rush Emigrants Laden with Firearms

Mailing of Letters Is Difficult

By Dr. James C. Olson
Supt., State Historical Society

I have frequently discussed in this column the diaries kept by early emigrants, making their way in wagons across the plains to California, Oregon and Utah, as sources of information on the early history of Nebraska. Many emigrants also wrote letters along the way, and often these were published in the newspapers back home. A recently published book—"California Emigrant Letters"—by Walker D. Wyman—contains a collection of these epistles from the gold rush, many of them written from what is now Nebraska.

Letter writing was difficult. As one emigrant wrote from near Chimney Rock, June 3, 1849, "in the first place we have just as much labour to do as keeps us constantly busy, and in the next place a fellow must tuck himself up on the ground, in the open air, with his legs crossed like a tailor's and write on his lap."

Once a letter was composed, the problem of getting it mailed was apt to be even more difficult. Occasionally a returning emigrant could be persuaded to carry letters back to the states for mailing, but the surest way was to leave them at a military post.

Ft. Kearney in central Nebraska was the first such establishment encountered by travelers after they jumped off from the Missouri river, and many a letter was mailed from there.

From these letters we can obtain good descriptions of eastern Nebraska and of the emigration as it appeared when once fairly out on the plains. As the writer said, Ft. Kearney was "an excellent point from which to see all that is desirable to be seen," as all the roads unite before reaching there.

The gold rush looked this way to one observer at Ft. Kearney, May 18, 1849:

"Every state, and I presume almost every town and county in the United States is now represented in this part of the world. Wagons of all patterns, sizes, and descriptions, drawn by bulls, cows, oxen, jackasses, mules and horses, are daily seen rolling along towards the Pacific, guarded by waking arsenals. Arms of all kinds must certainly be scarce in the States, after such a drain as the emigrants must have made upon them. Not a man but what has a gun or revolver or two."

A letter written from the fort on June 19, reports: "The cry is still they come. Five thousand and ninety-two wagons at sundown last night had moved past this place toward the gold regions of California, and 1,000 more are still behind, I think."
