

Out of Old Nebraska . . .
Senator Thurston
Known as Orator

Wowed Political Rally in Buffalo

John M. Thurston, U.S. senator from Nebraska, 1895-1901, was widely known for his oratorical powers. Indeed, among Nebraska's nationally-known political figures, he may be second only to William Jennings Bryan in his reputation for oratory.

Probably the high point of Senator Thurston's career as an orator came during the campaign of 1898, when he appeared at Buffalo, N.Y., with James G. Blaine, republican candidate for president. The crowd was so large that Mr. Blaine could not make himself heard — this was before the day of the public address system — and unable to hear, they became restless. The meeting was about to break up in pandemonium when Senator Thurston was called upon to speak.

Thurston served as Blaine's floor manager during the republican national convention, but the junior senator from Nebraska was hardly well known to the rank and file in that Buffalo audience. In a few minutes, though, he was able to quiet the noisy crowd — and he held it spellbound for an hour and 40 minutes. After his speech, he was carried out of the hall on the shoulders of his newly-won, enthusiastic admirers.

Senator Thurston's triumph in Buffalo came as no surprise to Nebraskans. They had seen him in action for almost 20 years.

Born in Vermont, August 21, 1847, Thurston came to the bustling new city of Omaha in 1869. He had seen service in the Union army and had studied law. As a young lawyer in Omaha he had a hard time of it — during most of his first year he slept on the office floor—but in a short while he began to get on.

In common with most of his colleagues, Thurston was active in politics. He served on the Omaha city council, and had a term in the legislature. His principal influence was exercised, though, as a delegate to republican conventions rather than as a candidate for office. He was chairman of the republican national convention in 1888 and 1896.

He was a strong candidate for the senate in 1893. In that year, however, he was but one of a number of strong candidates—J. Sterling Morton, Algernon S. Paddock, James E. Boyd and William Jennings Bryan—defeated by William V. Allen. Thurston's position as the Union Pacific's general solicitor weighed heavily against him in a legislature dominated by anti-monopolists.

Two years later, in 1895, the legislature was overwhelmingly republican, and Thurston was elected on the first ballot. He served one term in the senate, and then returned to the practice of law in Omaha. He died August 9, 1916.
