MOJAVE FUNERAL RITES.

Grief and Appetite Go Hand in Hand at These Ceremonies.

On the banks of the lower Colorado, among the gravel mesas and mesquite covered valleys, live the Mohave Indians, having their commercial headquarters at The Needles, Cal., famed as the hottest place in the United States excepting Death valley, and their seat of learning, supported by the government at Fort Mohave, A. T. In western Arizona, where snow and ice are unknown, clothing is useless except for ornament, and the mesquite tree bears all the food needed to sustain life, we find the Mohave Indians to resemble in appearance and habits the negroes of central Africa except in the particulars of curly hair and thick lips, having the same scorn for the restraints of clothing, and the same passionate fondness for brilliant plumage and gaudy cosmetics. Peculiar are the customs of these benighted people, but there is none more unique than the ceremony connected with their disposal of their dead.

An Indian woman died at noon, and we attended the funeral, four of us. The Mohaves practice cremation, and the cremating commences as soon as the breath is out of the body, as witness the fact that the woman died at noon and was on the funeral pile at 15 minutes past. Indeed it is said that the mourners are sometimes started at seeing the dead come to life again when the fire begins to grow fervent. Not many hicos, as the white people are called, are accorded the privilege of attending these ceremonies, but as we stand well with one of the wise men of the tribe we were invited to be present. As soon as we could swallow our dinners we started for the place and were guided there by the wallings of the friends of the departed, consisting of every man, woman and child present at the festivities. You can see the reasonableness of my calling it by such a name when you are told that the affair concludes by the killing and eating of all the horses of the departed, and every one goes to his own hut feeling that he has enjoyed himself greatly.

The Mohaves believe in demonstrating their feelings through the agency of the mouth and limbs, and this woman being much beloved the mourners were many, and their grief could be heard a mile away. If ever you have heard a pack of coyotes howling forth their misery in the middle of the night, when they howl most artistically, you have this noise to a dot.

Arriving at that place we found a hole dug in the ground about 10 feet in diameter and 2 feet deep, heaped full of wood and surmounted by the body of the deceased. This was burning, and around it in picturesque attitudes were all the friends trying to outdo each other in exclamations of grief. The head doctor, for the Mohaves have physicians, stood by the side of the genius who stirred the fire, giving directions for the most rapid destruction of the body, which he had, no doubt, with great skill assisted in becoming a corpse. He thus carried his functions a step further than the physicians in civilized life.

One old fellow, who seemed to be the minister, was standing within the circle haranguing the assembly doubtless on the many virtues of the departed, and when he seemed to make an unusually good point the mourners manifested their appreciation by an increase in the force of their groans.

Finally the relatives and friends ate the horses that were the property of the deceased and went home firmly believing that the dead woman's spirit is roaming untroubled in "Ghost mountain," just across the river.—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Women Du Maurier Draws.

We should feel as if Du Maurier had been fickle and faithless if he were suddenly to cease to offer us the tall, tranquil persons he understands so well. They have an inestimable look of repose, a kind of Greek serenity. There is a figure in a cut of which we have forgotten the "point" and the date (we mention it at hazard—it was one in a hundred), which only needed to be modeled in clay to be a truly "important" creation. A couple of children address themselves to a youthful aunt, who leans her hand upon a toilet table, presenting her back, clothed in a loose gown, not gathered in at the waist, to the spectator. Her charming pose, the way her head slowly turns, the beautiful folds of her robe, make her look more like a statuette in a museum than like a figure in Punch. We have forgotten what the children are saying, but we remember her charming attitude, which is a capital example of the love of beauty for beauty's sake. It is the same bias as the characteristic of the poet.—Henry James.

Are Spats Fashionable?

There is one point on which considerable doubt exists in various quarters. Are spats fashionable? is the query in which this doubt is sometimes expressed. The fact that some well dressed men persevere in wearing them does not exactly answer the question in the affirmative, for there are old army men and others who will continue all their lives to wear the same sort of things they wore some 10 or 15 years since. That spats since then have descended in the social scale may be otherwise conceded.—London News.

A Model Husband.

"I defy you to find a man who loves his wife as dearly as I love mine. To render her happy I would undertake to go and live alone at the top of a mountain."

"But you would never come up to Puntolini's uncle, who, when he ascertained that his wife looked best in mourning, went and committed suicide."—Corriere della Sera.

Love as a Disease.

WONDERFUL!

The cures which are being effected by Drs. Starkey & Palen, 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa., in Consumption, Catarrh, Neuralgia, Bronchitis, Rheumatism, and all chronic diseases by their compound Oxygen Treatment is indeed marvelous.

If you are a sufferer from any disease which your physician has failed to cure, write for information about this treatment, and their book of two hundred pages, giving a history of Compound Oxygen, its nature and effects with numerous testimonials from patients, to whom you may refer for still further information, will be promptly sent, without charge.

This book aside from its great merit as a medical work, giving as it does, the result of years of study and experience, you will find a very interesting one.

Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, 5129 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa. 120 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal. Please mention this paper.

The vast facilities of the J. C. Ayer Co., of Lowell, Mass., enable them to place The Superior Blood-purifier—Ayer's Sarsaparilla—within reach of the poorest invalid. Don't be induced to take a "cheap" substitute. Always remember that the best is the cheapest.

It is hard to understand how anybody can doubt that there is a devil who knows that there is a Texas.

In all cases where a mild and effective aperient is needed, Ayer's pills are the best. They improve the appetite, restore healthy action, promote digestion, and regulate every function. No pill is in greater demand, or more highly recommended by the profession.

Among the changing fashions in calling-cards it is a comfort that four aces can still hold their own.
