—The people at Haskell & Williams' horse ranch on the Dismal have had con siderable work this winter running down wild horses. Most people have an idea this is sport, but it is work, the hardest kind of work. The horses roam on the prairie in small bands, each stallion having his family. The first business is to shoot these scrub stallions, when the mares and colts of the family will join another band. This is repeated until the horses are gathered into a good

There were about six hundred representative Republicans from all parts of the state at the meeting of Republican clubs in Omaha last week. There is a harmony of views that never appeared before. Factions in the party are a thing of the past, there being a common feeling that we must lay aside petty differences and down the enemy, when there will be time enough to settle family quarrels. The same feeling characterizes the party throughout the nation, an indication that victory will surely perch on our banners.

mares and colts of the family will join another band. This is repeated until the horses are gathered into a good sized bunch, the object being to chase as many down at once as possible. Then the work begins. One or two horsemen take after the bunch and chase them as rapidly as possible for ten or fifteen miles, when a relief, who has been stationed at some point where the herd is expected to pass, falls in and keeps the horses in rapid motion until another relief takes his place. This is kept up night and day usually for five days before the horses are tired out and will permit themselves to be corralled.
