PITTSBURG, May 9.- Immediately following the announcement that Andrew Carnegie will build a $25,000 free library at Braddock, comes the statement that the employes of the Duquesne mill will be compelled to work at a reduction in wages of 20 per cent. The Duquesne plant has been closed for a month, undergoing extensive repairs, and will re-sume operations. The improvements made dispense with the services of several hundred men. A strike has occurred at this mill every spring since it was erected five years ago. The unsettled condition of labor and the defeat at Homestead may prevent a strike this

How the Nations of the Earth Are Arrayed Along Columbus Avenue - Seventeen Countries Have Erected Their Own Buildings-Among the Foreign Villages

World's Fair, May 10. - [Special.] -A visit to the exposition is like a tour of the world. Not only are the nations of the earth here, but they are here with their best foot foremost. They show the best they have, and to the best advantage. Not content with the products of their soil and forests, their workshops and fisheries, their mines and studios, they show native life and architecture in whole villages and dropped down here at Jackson park. They display not only the houses, temples week at the fair is as good as six months spent in a voyage round the world. In fact, the odds both in point of interest and education are in favor of the fair. It is perhaps too early to say which of cago travel very light, considering that other takes the lead elsewhere. In the showing here. One excels here and anfair. top guarding the valley beneath, in which industry and art are showing their perfections and accomplishments. Just across the intersecting aisle, and occupying the southwestern corner, is Great Britain. The display at first sight is not impressive, because there is no great towering structure, no characteristic save that of quiet, conservative solidity and ele-gance in the modest pavilions erected prin-cipally by firms. There are many beautiful wares within the English section, and the whole will well repay a day's inspec-tion. The most noteworthy structure here is the reproduction of the splendid ban-queting room of famous Hatfield hall. Beyond great Britain are the displays of Canada, Denmark, Italy, Brazil and Spain. Facing Great Britain next to the central clock tower, and on the opposite side of Columbus avenue, stands the white, marole-like structure of France. It is a copy of one of the famous facades at Versailles, and has a splendid arch 100 feet across. Within are wares and fabrics for which the French are famous, with a profusion of tapestry, of decorative work, of paintby her husband, Prince Antonio and suite. The Columbus avenue and the open space at the clock tower throughout three quarters of the building. The remaining quarter, tional tower or pavilion, no characteristic device, and by the side of the spectacular German display, which it faces, our show-ing seems rather simple and plain. But this is only the impression at first glance. Careful scrutiny demonstrates that though two or three private firms were left to pre-sent the facade which should in a manner compete with the more costly structures of Germany on the west and France on the south, we are not so far behind. Prettier displays than those made by the New York firms who occupy the post of honor for the United States, Tiffany and the Gorham company, it is impossible to find among the efforts of firms or individuals. As a rule, however, the American exhibits are not so well installed as those of foreign exhibitors. While there are notable exceptions, the average of taste and impressiveness in the manner of display is below that of our friends from across the sea.

One of the handsomest displays among the foreign section is that of Switzerland, where the products of the little mountainous republic are screened on the three sides by a panorama of the Alps, strikingly preserving the illusion that here is Switzerland, with her homes and her industries, and there the mountains towering over the peaceful valleys. One may almost imagine himself among the Alps.

It is not alone in the main building that one is impressed with the fact that foreign governments are making a great effort at this exposition. All over the grounds, in almost every department, the handiwork of our world-cousins is seen. Omitting the vast sums which foreign private exhibitors have spent here, a compilation just made by the managers of the fair shows that foreign governments appropriated more than $6,000,000 for the purpriated more than $6,000,000 for the purposes of this exposition. Inasmuch as the grand total of expenditures in the whole enterprise by the Chicago corporation, by the national government, by the various states and by foreign governments is a little more than $33,000,000, it will be seen that the foreign governments have furnished more than one-fifth of the entire capital. This fact indicates more graphically than any description can depict the prominent part borne in this grand affair by the people of Europe, Asia, Africa and South America.

No more beautiful and interesting structures are to be found in the grounds than those erected by the chief European and those erected by the chief European and other nations. Seventeen nations in all have their own buildings here, a few of them serving to house the entire exhibit of the country, but the most of them being simply offices, with parlors for rendezvous of their countrymen and friends, and de-signed as exponents of the architecture and decorations typical of the lands whence they came. All but one of these seventeen structures are massed together in the northern part of the enclosure, Great Britain, France and Germany and Spain having the choice location, facing the shores of Lake Michigan. Here as in the main exhibition hall the Germans appear to be in the lead. At least their na-tional house is more spectacular, the walls being brilliantly ornamented with color, and the gothic windows and peaks being

Nothing could exceed the beauty of this part of the exposition. There are winding roads among the palaces, leafy walks and blooming flowers. One is not surprised that large throngs of visitors leave the more sensational parts of the show and come here to study international architecture and decoration and to rest from the highways. The nations which have buildings of their own are Germany, Great Britain, Spain, Italy, France, Canada, Hayti, East India, Sweden, Venezuela, Turkey, Brazil, Colombia, Guatemala, Costa Rica, Ceylon and Japan. The last named stands apart from the others, occupying the prettiest spot in the whole en-closure, the wooded island which rests within the water space almost in the cen-ter of the grounds. Here the Japanese have built what is one of the greatest attractions to the fair, the Hooden palace, modeled after the famous Hoodoo palace which stands near Ko Kioto. Every day thousands of visitors cross the bridges to see the temple, and the thrifty Japanese, the Yankees of the Orient, carry on a flourishing business in tea and curios. As I have said, the foreign exhibits are everywhere. In the Women's building the women of Great Britain have a most interesting exhibit, in the Horticultural and Agricultural halls the foreigners are almost as conspicuous relatively as they are in the great main structure, and in the are in the great main structure, and in the Electricity and Machinery departments they are lively rivals for supremacy. The best display in the Mining building is made by a German house, and outside the principal departments there is no single exhibit that compares in popular interest with that of Krupp and his great gun. In the Transportation building the English show their locomotives and coaches, their switching and other devices, and the display of models of ships and steamers, of boats and vehicles, is world-wide in its scope. But for our foreign friends the most novel and picturesque feature of the fair, the Midway plaisance, would be rather dismal. This stretch of ground is a sort of side-show, and of the forty concession more than one-half are for foreign curiosities or aggregations. Here is the true Cosmopolitanville. A simple list of the shows, and this an incomplete one, is suffi-cient to indicate to the reader that if he wishes to see the world and its people he need not spend a thousand dollars in circumnavigating the earth, but simply come here and spend a five-dollar note in admission fees. Here are the international beauty show, the Irish village, the German village, the Tyrolese, the Japanese bazaar, the Fiji islanders, the men from Borneo and New Zealand, the street in Cairo with shop and mosque, the Chinese village, the Turkish bazaar, a model of St. Peters at Rome, the Dahomey village, the Laplanders, Buffalo Bill's American Indians, an Algerian temple and theater, a French cider press, a Vienna cafe, a Moorish palace, two crack military bands from the German army, and Hagenback's aggregation of the animals of all climes and lands will make a fitting complement of this most complete display of international life, industry and trade ever brought together. These are all ever brought together. gether. These are all money-making devices, and an admission fee is charged to see most of the sights, but the fees are moderate and all the regulations and the police control are under the managem of the expositio
