On Monday last John Pitt met a young man living in Medicine precinct and proceeded to take on a jag. During their hilariousness Pitt told the youth from the Medicine that he had a horse which he would trade for one owned by the latter. The trade was made and Pitt immediately sold his newly acquired property to Joe Little, of Garfield, for five dollars. It then transpired that the horse Pitt had traded was a dead one down at the stock yards. The Medicine youth then made a squeal and took the matter to county attorney Snelling. TRIBUNE. - Dear Sir: - We have had recently three fires or calls for the little luster upon our methods of combating the dreaded fire king, the common enemy of all our western towns. Our volunteer brigade always turns out with commendable promptitude exhibiting an alacrity and "esprit de corps" which would do credit to the largest and best appointed cities of our state. But their ardor and zeal is of little value when they can get no water. In places where they pray for water and get none from the clouds folks rail against Providence: here we pay for it and getting none when most needed, there seems to be little kicking against the waterworks corporation. Now if property owners would dig wells at the street corners. there is an inexhaustible supply within six feet of the surface, and have those least doubt but that fires such as we have trol with but triffing damage. North Platte is known far and wide for its schools and the intelligence of its people. The writer was ashamed of the meagre attendance last Saturday night. Where there were but a hundred in the house there should have been the full capacity of the hall, say 400.
